

I am a 52 year old diagnosed with chronic closed angle glaucoma 7 years ago. Determined to keep my sight I complied with every procedure modern medicine has to offer including lazer, operations etc and after nearly 20,000 kilometres of travel and untold agony and pain I now have 2% vision remaining.

During my many visits to hospitals etc I was often advised (off the cuff from many medical professionals) that I should try using cannabis which at first I did not believe would help so after enormous effort to obtain nothing more than a herbal plant I began experimenting. The pain relief was unbelievable plus the resulting eye pressure tests better than I have ever had.

Cannabis is a vital medicine for many serious illnesses which modern medicine has not been able to help and to uphold its current classification as a dangerous plant of no medicinal value is the joke of the century.
