

Canberra Hearings for Chronic Disease Inquiry

The first public hearings of a new parliamentary inquiry into Chronic Disease Prevention and Management in Primary Health Care will be held next week in Canberra.

Chair of the House of Representatives Health Committee, Steve Irons MP said 'The Committee's initial hearings will consider a range of issues including chronic disease prevention and management in rural, remote and indigenous primary health care. The Committee will also hear from groups about the prevention and management of chronic mental health conditions, dementia, and cancer in primary health care.'

"There are many stakeholders in the fields of chronic disease prevention and management and primary health care, and the Committee is interested in how these stakeholders work to improve health outcomes and avoid unnecessary hospitalisations," Mr Irons said.

"Bringing stakeholders together, and finding ways to prevent chronic disease, or improve the way chronic disease is managed in primary health care may deliver positive outcomes for all Australians at risk of chronic disease," Mr Irons concluded.
