

The original premise of multiculturalism as promised was that all of us would be “happy little vegemites” doing our own things and enhancing Australian values and culture. Instead, like Europe and England who have virtually open slather immigration our system is going to end up in disaster like theirs. Their cultures, values and social systems are under pressure from ideologies and fundamentalism demanding their own ways. Many of these practices are happening in Australia under the auspices of our Parliamentary system who refuse to debate or question multiculturalism which appears to be under the UN mandate.

In Australia we adapt to immigrants and refugees. It used to be the other way round. The UN treaties have a lot to do with the problems - how to save lives they never think of the effect on other cultures. Just dropping unsuitable refugees or migrants into places, expect them to be welcomed without knowledge of English and our values and culture is crazy for them and us.

All you end up with is islands of loneliness despair and insecurity. Neighbourhoods break down schooling systems are adapted against the home societies and resentment builds about what used to be; governments doing the right thing with rose coloured glasses for UN treaties doing nothing about the fears of their own societies and the electorates generally. In essence the previous immigration system demanded English adaptation and integration. Today is an unregulated farce where they do what they want to do because globalisation doesn't fit in with any one culture and multiculturalism crosses all borders. It suits some ethnic tribal cultures from Africa and Islam very well because their religion or tribe is their life where the country is and their outlook doesn't matter except the end result for them, By their growth they will soon be a threat.

A Parliamentary enquiry on a subject that is a disaster wherever it has been tried all over the world has plenty of evidence that has been obvious to everyone else for years.

It simply doesn't work and the fact it hasn't been debated in Parliament for decades is a disgrace and probably unconstitutional. So for an inquiry like this, look at the internet, look at France, Germany, Holland and Britain. Ask Mr Cameron the British Prime Minister and most of all take notice of the facts and admit it was a mistake starting this insidious system in the first place. It threatens Australian culture, our history, our way of life. The UN treaties hamstring and limit own Government in policy on multiculturalism. The UN should have no say on this as our government is elected by Australian voters. What needs to be done:-

1. A referendum on multiculturalism
2. Immigration policy should be debated in Parliament like the other issues with no prior agreements
3. Australia should not be subjected to outside pressures on this policy from the UN
4. Deportation or turn around procedures for unsuitable immigrants or refugees should not be subject to endless appeals
5. The problem with multiculturalism is that gives its rights to immigrants and refugees that they don't earn if they know nothing about the values or cultures they are imposing their views on where they go. In effect this often creates ignorance and dissent not inclusiveness which should be the ultimate goal. Multiculturalism has been protected too long by our Parliamentary system by ignoring its obvious glaring deficits. In effect it discriminates against Australian citizens in the way their fears about it have been ignored by all levels of government.
