THE PAINFULNESS OF THE CURATIVE PROCESS

The first part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the nature of the curative process and the role of the physician in it. It is argued that the curative process is a complex and often painful one, and that the physician's role is to help the patient through it.

The second part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the role of the patient in the curative process. It is argued that the patient's role is to cooperate with the physician and to do his or her best to overcome the illness.

The third part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the role of the family in the curative process. It is argued that the family's role is to provide support and care for the patient, and to help the patient to overcome the illness.

The fourth part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the role of the community in the curative process. It is argued that the community's role is to provide resources and support for the patient, and to help the patient to overcome the illness.

The fifth part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the role of the government in the curative process. It is argued that the government's role is to provide resources and support for the patient, and to help the patient to overcome the illness.

The sixth part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the role of the church in the curative process. It is argued that the church's role is to provide support and care for the patient, and to help the patient to overcome the illness.

The seventh part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the role of the school in the curative process. It is argued that the school's role is to provide resources and support for the patient, and to help the patient to overcome the illness.

The eighth part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the role of the family in the curative process. It is argued that the family's role is to provide support and care for the patient, and to help the patient to overcome the illness.

The ninth part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the role of the community in the curative process. It is argued that the community's role is to provide resources and support for the patient, and to help the patient to overcome the illness.

The tenth part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the role of the government in the curative process. It is argued that the government's role is to provide resources and support for the patient, and to help the patient to overcome the illness.

The eleventh part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the role of the church in the curative process. It is argued that the church's role is to provide support and care for the patient, and to help the patient to overcome the illness.

The twelfth part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the role of the school in the curative process. It is argued that the school's role is to provide resources and support for the patient, and to help the patient to overcome the illness.
