QUESTIONS ON NOTICE

Outcome: Agencies

Question Number: W326-04

Question:

Senator Harradine asked in writing:

How many specialists does Comcare employ to assist it in making determinations as to whether to continue liability or otherwise? How does Comcare determine which specialists it employs (as consultants or in any other role)? How does Comcare determine whether to discontinue using a particular specialist? Please provide a list of all specialists employed by Comcare, their names, positions and company, and the dollar amounts paid to each for each of the last five years?

Answer:

Comcare does not directly employ medical specialists to assist in making determinations.

The majority of claims for compensation are decided on the basis of opinions provided by the claimant's treating general practitioner or specialist. However, where doubt remains about the existence or extent of liability claims managers may exercise powers under section 57 of the Safety Rehabilitation and Compensation Act to arrange for a medical examination and opinion to be obtained from past treating or independent doctors.

Section 57 outlines the power to require a medical examination, Section 57(1) states:

“Where:

(a) a notice has been given to a relevant authority under section 53 in relation to an employee; or

(b) an employee has made a claim for compensation under section 54;
the relevant authority may require the employee to undergo an examination by one legally qualified medical practitioner nominated by the relevant authority.”

Practicing specialists within Australia who have treated the claimant for their claimed condition or legally qualified medical practitioners from a range of existing medico-legal firms are utilised by Comcare. Independent legally qualified medical practitioners are chosen based on the nature of injury, the type of specialist listed within the organisations available and their ability to deliver timely appointments and reports. The selection of a particular specialist or firm is left to the individual claim manager.

Details of firms utilised by Comcare including treating providers and health professionals paid under the above provisions for the last five years are attached. In seeking medical evidence under Section 57 of the SRC Act Comcare does not only refer injured workers to independent doctors. A large volume of requests are directed to the claimants own treating specialist or health professional. Over three thousand records have been identified that relate to this area over the last five years. Due to the size of the overall records 410 payee records are enclosed representing the majority of payments (where payments made over the five years are in excess of $999 in total). The remaining two and a half thousand records identify entities who have only been reimbursed an average of $200 over the five years in total. Where a firm is identified in the attached list as providing a medico examination service no electronic records are available to identify which particular specialist contracted by that firm or linked to that company undertook the actual service.

Where concerns are expressed as to the quality of a legally qualified medical practitioner utilised under Section 57 of the SRC Act Comcare's Complaints Handling Unit would investigate these complaints on a case by case basis. No systemic complaints against any particular specialist have been identified and no records have been identified of medico-legal firms being advised by Comcare that their services or specific providers will no longer be used.

Comcare applies the following jurisdictional principles when using Independent Legally Qualified Medical Practitioners:

1. The practice of "doctor shopping" and the seeking of an opinion from a doctor who is known to hold a particular view (adverse to claimant or employer) on specific medical conditions or issues is not condoned.
2. An independent legally qualified medical practitioner's (LQMP's) opinion is sought where, in the opinion of the delegate:
 - the claimant does not receive treatment from a LQMP with relevant qualifications; or/and
 - the treating medical opinion/s is/are inconclusive; or/and
 - further specialised opinion is reasonably required; or/and
 - conflicts of opinion between treating doctors must be resolved.
3. An independent LQMP is supplied within the city or state in which the claimant resides or is employed. Where the claimant lives in a rural or non metropolitan area, they are referred to a LQMP with relevant qualifications in the nearest major city or capital.
4. Where a claimant is referred to an independent LQMP, they are informed of the date, location and any travel arrangements. This information also includes reference to a "reasonable excuse" for refusal or failure to attend and obstruction of the examination as set out in section 57 of the SRC Act.
