

Personal choice and community impacts Senate inquiry

Keep Sydney Open wishes to make a submission to the Senate inquiry addressing terms of reference B, the sale and service of alcohol, including any impact on crime and the health, enjoyment and finances of drinkers and non-drinkers.

Below are some of the broader issues we wish to raise, which have been raised by a number of business owners, employees and members of the public:

- lack of community and business consultation
- lack of distinction between violent and non-violent venues
- lack of distinction between a cultural and non-cultural venue
- lack of protections in place for culturally significant venues
- failure to identify venues that are vital to a community or precinct
- failure to identify venues which do not attract violent patrons
- failure to measure economic impact of lockouts on small business
- failure to compensate for economic loss resulting from the change in legislation
- failure to consider the impact on the city's tourism and reputation
- failure to implement effective safety measures instead of lockouts
- failure to address root causes of violence
- failure of state government to value creative communities
- failure to accept responsibility for patron and crime dispersal
- failure to support entertainment precincts
- unfair focus on restricting general population and not perpetrators
- unfair treatment of young people
- exaggerated and misleading accounts of assault rates
- preferential treatment given to gambling venues over cultural hubs
- refusal to extend trading hours for small bars and non-violent venues
- overly expensive processes for exemption and extension applications
- lack of nuance in assessing niche venues and their risks
- lack of transport after midnight in and out of entertainment precincts
- conflating problem drinking with responsible drinking
- state government MPs deciding on inner-city issues despite lack of familiarity
- reports of unprofessional conduct and intimidation from licensing police

Keep Sydney Open is an advocacy group representing culturally significant venues and social spaces, artists, musicians as well as local inner-city residents and members of the public across NSW.
