PUBLIC UNIVERSITIES WAGE THEFT REPORT

THIRD EDITION

JUNE 2024

THE FIGURES:

The total amount of money so far in identified wage theft across the higher education sector:

$382,048,628

THIS FIGURE INCLUDES:

$203 MILLION

in confirmed underpayments of staff that have occurred at 30 Australian public universities

$168 MILLION

in provisions for underpayments that have been recorded by 9 universities in their recently released annual reports

$10 MILLION

in estimated underpayments occurring at one institutions that has confirmed systemic underpayments, but has concealed the dollar amount unknown amounts at two institutions that have confirmed systemic underpayments have occurred, but have withheld details so no reasonable estimate can be produced

Types of verified underpayment commonly found in Australian universities include failure to pay penalty rates, failure to pay appropriate rates (by work classification), failure to pay for minimum shift durations, not correctly paying for marking, and withholding payment of full superannuation amounts.

The vast majority of these underpayments have occurred since 2014, with the earliest starting in 2009. The NTEU analysed 62 separate incidents of wage theft across 30 public universities in which a dollar amount has been confirmed, and three additional institutions that have confirmed underpayments were made but have not revealed the extent of these incidents.

Shamefully, at least 131,471 individual higher education staff have been underpaid by their employers. A further four wage theft cases are not included in the total because they are yet to be finalised.

These claims are worth millions of additional dollars, meaning the true higher education wage theft tally could reach $400m this year. On top of this many universities have not had external third parties undertake full forensic audits of their historical payrolls – meaning that significant underpayments are likely yet to be uncovered.

In this third edition of NTEU's periodic wage theft report series we have for the first time included annual report provisions. Provisions are amounts that universities have set aside on their balance sheets to cover future projected payments required to rectify historical underpayments. These amounts are generally estimates and may be revised as audits continue.

Thanks to brave union members speaking out about stolen wages, our union has been able to win millions of dollars in backpay. We need real change in our universities and that starts with an end to bad governance.
