Inquiry into the impact of the exercise of law enforcement and intelligence powers on the freedom of the press

Dear Committee

Please find below the Office of the Australian Information Commissioner's (OAIC) response to questions on notice.

Questions

Since 1 July 2004, please provide a year-by-year breakdown of:

1. How many times has the OAIC reviewed an FOI decision to refuse access to a document in reliance on the national security exemption in section 33?
2. How many times has the OAIC reviewed an FOI decision to refuse access to part of a document in reliance on the national security exemption in section 33?

OAIC response

The OAIC commenced operation on 1 November 2010, under the Australian Information Commissioner Act 2010. As a result, I provide the Committee with the following information about Information Commissioner reviews (IC reviews) from the date the office was established – 1 November 2010.¹

Section 33 of the Freedom of Information Act 1982 (FOI Act) provides:

Documents affecting national security, defence or international relations

A document is an exempt document if disclosure of the document under this Act:

- (a) would, or could reasonably be expected to, cause damage to:
 - (i) the security of the Commonwealth;
 - (ii) the defence of the Commonwealth; or

¹ Before the establishment of the OAIC, the first level of external merits review of FOI decisions lay with the Administrative Appeals Tribunal.

- (iii) the international relations of the Commonwealth; or
- (b) would divulge any information or matter communicated in confidence by or on behalf of a foreign government, an authority of a foreign government or an international organization to the Government of the Commonwealth, to an authority of the Commonwealth or to a person receiving the communication on behalf of the Commonwealth or of an authority of the Commonwealth.

Since 1 November 2010, the OAIC has received 61 applications for IC review of decisions refusing access to documents under section 33(a)(i) (national security) of the FOI Act, either in full or in part, or in combination with other exemptions under the FOI Act.

Of these 61 applications, 24 were subsequently withdrawn by the applicant, 12 were declined under section 54W(b) of the FOI Act,² 13 were declined under other subsections of section 54W,³ and a further two were found to be out of jurisdiction.

Ten applications progressed to a formal decision by the Information Commissioner under section 55K of the FOI Act. In seven, the Information Commissioner affirmed the original decision. One decision was set aside and two were varied by the Information Commissioner, however section 33(a)(i) was not the basis for the variation of these decisions.

A year-by-year breakdown of the outcome of IC review outcomes is at Attachment A to this letter.

a. How many of those decisions have related to a document marked “secret” or “top secret”?

OAIC response

Documents which are the subject of an exemption claim under section 33(a)(i) would ordinarily have a classification marking. However this classification marking is not determinative of the exemption claim.

As noted at part 5.26 of the FOI Guidelines (which relates to exemptions under section 33):

5.26 The classification markings on a document (such as ‘secret’ or ‘confidential’) are not of themselves conclusive of whether the exemption applies (see also [5.41] – [5.47] below in relation to information communicated in confidence).

² Section 54W(b) of the FOI Act provides that the Information Commissioner may decide not to undertake an IC review, or not to continue to undertake an IC review, if the Information Commissioner is satisfied that the interests of the administration of the FOI Act make it desirable that the reviewable decision be considered by the Administrative Appeals Tribunal.

³ These subsections provide that the Information Commissioner may decide not to undertake an IC review, or not to continue to undertake an IC review, if satisfied that the IC review application is frivolous, vexatious, misconceived, lacking in substance or not made in good faith, if the IC review applicant has failed to cooperate in progressing the IC review without reasonable excuse, if the IC review applicant cannot be contacted despite reasonable attempts being made, or when the IC review applicant fails to comply with a direction of the Information Commissioner.

I trust this information assists the Committee.

Yours sincerely

Angelene Falk
Australian Information Commissioner
