I am a high school teacher and have found the following in regards to NAPLAN:

1. Some schools intentionally under-perform in Year 7 and then focus on Year 9, thus showing an artificially high level of improvement.
2. I teach in a school that performs below the state an similar schools averages, I have found that the publication of these results on the MySchool site has reflected negatively on the school, whilst not taking into account other programs and factors, such as % of students finding full time work, entering tertiary studies, sporting performance, student works being selected for ArtExpress etc
