

Dear Committee Secretariat

At the Committee's hearing of the inquiry into TAFE in Sydney on 9 April the Chair asked Mr Shreeve what proportion of TAFE students are second chance learners.

Mr Shreeve and I took the question on notice and agreed to provide the figure at a later date.

In answer to the question we provide the following information:

We have defined 'second chance learner' as follows: 'early school leavers aged 24 years and below and adults aged 25 years and over who have not completed a non-school qualification'. This is the definition used in a study by the NCVER (2008) Second-chance vocational education and training. We have replicated their methodology using 2012 TAFE data, the latest available, and find that approximately 27% of the total number of TAFE students are second chance learners. This 27% excludes those attending school who may also be attending TAFE. This finding is in line with the rough figure given by Mr Shreeve at the hearing (30%).

We trust this answers the Senator's question. Please let us know if we can provide any further assistance on this issue.

Kind regards

Marilyn Hart

Director, Tertiary Education Reform
Australian Workforce and Productivity Agency