A ASIC's role and engagement with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander consumers

Key points

ASIC seeks to ensure the needs of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander consumers and investors are addressed effectively and appropriately as part of our regulatory activities and broader remit.

Through ASIC's Indigenous Outreach Program (IOP), we aim to provide insights on the needs and lived experiences of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples to inform our work and to help inform industry's approach and engagement with these consumers.

Our engagement is also informed and underpinned by ASIC's Indigenous Financial Services Framework and Reconciliation Action Plans.

ASIC's role and regulatory activities

- 6 ASIC is Australia's integrated corporate, markets, financial services and consumer credit regulator. Our vision is for a fair, strong and efficient financial system for all Australians. We use our regulatory tools to change behaviours to drive good consumer outcomes, take regulatory action against misconduct to maintain trust and integrity in the financial system and to help all Australians to be in control of their financial lives.
- 7 As part of ASIC's long-standing commitment to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples, ASIC established the Indigenous Outreach Program (IOP) as a dedicated team in 2009.
- 8 ASIC's IOP team is a national team, currently comprising eight full-time staff and a dedicated senior manager. It sits within ASIC's Financial Services and Wealth Group but works across the whole of ASIC, providing specialist advice, insight and support.
- 9 The role of ASIC's IOP team is to ensure the needs of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander consumers and investors are addressed effectively and appropriately as part of ASIC's regulatory activities and broader remit. ASIC's IOP team seeks to support these consumers, directly or through intermediaries, to achieve better outcomes when engaging with the financial system.
- 10 We note the great diversity of experience among Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples in the financial system and with financial outcomes. Based on the experience of ASIC's IOP team, there are persistent issues for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples in the financial system.

- 11 Some examples of these issues are:
- (a) geographic, financial literacy, cultural or language barriers to access financial services and products;
 - (b) challenges navigating complex systems or formal identification requirements;
 - (c) low understanding or minimal choice related to high-cost credit products including payday loans and consumer leases; and
 - (d) lack of digital access and the risk of digital exclusion.
- 12 Some of the workstreams for ASIC’s IOP team are summarised in Table 1.

Table 1: Activities of ASIC’s IOP team

Activity	What it involves
Sharing experience and insights	ASIC’s IOP team provides insights on the needs and lived experiences of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples, to inform ASIC’s implementation of law reform and regulatory activities and, to help inform industry’s approach and engagement. Note: See Appendix 1: Statement to the Financial Services Royal Commission.
Support and engagement with other ASIC teams	ASIC’s IOP team supports other ASIC teams to ensure engagement with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples is culturally informed and appropriate. This includes assisting enforcement and surveillance teams when alleged misconduct affects Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples and when ASIC is considering specific engagement with consumers (e.g. guiding the use of interpreters, engaging with a trusted local third party, ensuring a culturally safe location for conversations). Note: See Appendix 2: Summary of ASIC enforcement outcomes.
Liaison with other regulators and relevant organisations	ASIC’s IOP team works with networks across the financial system, including other regulators, financial counsellors, legal representatives, community organisations and government departments on issues affecting Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples. We receive timely and valuable intelligence, ensuring our activities and regulatory responses are informed by, and in collaboration with, these networks.
Liaison with industry	ASIC’s IOP team works with industry to influence behaviours to improve access to financial services and products, and appropriate engagement for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander consumers within the financial system.
Targeted messaging and resources	ASIC’s IOP team develops and promotes targeted messaging and resources on important issues for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander consumers and intermediaries (e.g. financial counsellors, community organisations and legal representatives). Note: See Appendix 3: Consumer resources on ASIC’s Moneysmart website.
Helpline and support	ASIC’s IOP team manages a telephone helpline and email inbox for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander consumers and intermediaries. This service provides information or assistance within ASIC’s remit, or warm referrals to other organisations.
Targeted outreach and stakeholder engagement	ASIC’s IOP team undertakes targeted outreach and stakeholder engagement across urban, regional and remote locations to support ASIC’s regulatory activities and the participation of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander consumers in the financial system.

Engagement with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander consumers and other stakeholder groups

- 13 ASIC aims to ensure that the needs and experiences of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples are considered in our approach to improving outcomes in the financial system, and that industry is also engaged in considering the needs and experiences of these consumers.

Superannuation outreach to consumers

- 14 One example which highlights our cross-sector approach began in 2013, when ASIC held a series of information forums with superannuation industry representatives and other interested stakeholder groups to raise awareness about the key challenges Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples face when accessing and engaging with their superannuation.
- 15 Following these forums, the Association of Superannuation Funds of Australia (ASFA), the Australian Institute of Superannuation Trustees (AIST) and superannuation fund representatives established an Indigenous Superannuation Working Group (ISWG) aimed at improving Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples' access to and understanding of their superannuation.
- 16 ASIC has continued to be involved in the ISWG. ASIC travelled with a representative from one fund to Lockhart River, Queensland to experience first-hand the barriers to access for that fund's members. This resulted in significant changes at the fund, with resources devoted to reconnecting 'lost' members living in remote postcodes in Queensland with their superannuation, in liaison with other relevant organisations (such as the Australian Electoral Office and the Queensland Registry of Births Deaths and Marriages).
- 17 In 2018, ASIC coordinated a trip to the Anangu Pitjantjatjara Yankunytjatjara (APY) Lands in South Australia with senior representatives of superannuation funds as well as other regulators, such as AUSTRAC, the Australian Taxation Office and the then Department of Human Services.
- 18 The purpose of this trip was to involve industry representatives in experiencing first-hand, and working to resolve, barriers to the superannuation system that are experienced by community members. For example, people were not able to access information about their individual entitlements, because of limited access to formal identification.
- 19 During this visit, some 500 APY community members, estimated as 50% of the working community, received direct personal assistance from the superannuation fund representatives and regulators through this collaborative approach.

Kobelt litigation: Working with witnesses in the APY Lands

20 ASIC took regulatory action against an informal credit (‘book-up’) provider, Lindsey Kobelt, who was based in the town of Mintabie in the APY Lands in South Australia. ASIC’s action alleging unlicensed credit activities was ultimately successful, while our claim of unconscionable conduct was not upheld.

Note: See Australian Securities and Investments Commission v Kobelt [2019] HCA 18. For a description of ‘book up’, see ‘Key terms’ in this submission.

21 ASIC’s IOP team worked with ASIC’s enforcement team to prepare for and obtain evidence from witnesses, and to support witnesses in the subsequent court proceedings. After conversations with community members to understand the best way to engage with possible witnesses, representatives from ASIC’s IOP team conducted community meetings in each of the APY Lands communities where prospective witnesses were located.

22 The purpose of these meetings was to allow prospective witnesses to seek and receive the consent of their communities to work with ASIC and provide evidence in the litigation. This approach allowed witnesses to feel comfortable giving evidence and resolved concerns that some witnesses may be culturally precluded from involvement.

23 As part of these proceedings, ASIC made a successful application for the Federal Court to take evidence from those witnesses ‘on country’. The Federal Court travelled to the APY Lands communities where witnesses were located, as well as the township of Mintabie, and conducted a ‘view’ of each community.

24 The court then sat in the township of Marla on the eastern edge of the APY Lands to hear evidence from each of the witnesses involved. These considerations ensured that Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander witnesses were able to participate in the trial.

ASIC’s Indigenous Financial Services Framework

25 ASIC understands the need to continue to learn from Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples and communities about their specific needs and experiences to ensure our work is tailored appropriately and properly informed.

26 ASIC engaged Professor Robynne Quiggin of the University of Technology Sydney to lead a project to build a stronger understanding of how money is seen, used and valued, and the needs and lived experiences of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples when engaging with the financial system.

- 27 The project has been led by and for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples, starting with a roundtable in late 2019, to inform the design of the project, featuring Indigenous professionals experienced in national policy and program development, research and industry.
- 28 The project included in-person and virtual consultations across community service and program delivery organisations in urban, regional and remote locations of Australia, and with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities to hear from a range of diverse voices. The key learnings from the consultations were incorporated into ASIC's Indigenous Financial Services Framework (Framework). The Framework is designed to reflect how ASIC can best support positive financial outcomes for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples across our regulatory responsibilities.
- 29 ASIC will use the Framework to underpin our own work and to encourage all participants in the financial system to continue to build an understanding of the perspectives and experiences of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples, and to embed that understanding into effective engagement with and support for these consumers. From early 2022, ASIC's IOP team will lead implementation of the Framework, facilitating conversations and collaboration among stakeholder groups to drive positive financial outcomes for these consumers.
- 30 An important part of taking this work forward will be ensuring that the voices of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples are heard and key learnings shared among financial system participants, and that solutions are formed based on those insights, values and perspectives.
- 31 On 26 October 2021, Professor Quiggin, senior ASIC leaders and representatives from ASIC's IOP team held a workshop with participants from credit and banking industry associations, major banks, buy now pay later providers and other credit providers. Some of the long-standing complex challenges experienced by Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples and their communities were raised in this discussion.
- 32 Issues raised included language barriers, geographic isolation of some customers causing challenges with access, lack of formal identification due to historic policies, lack of access to services, and lack of available data on the financial wellbeing of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples.
- 33 The workshop's objective was to foster engagement with the Framework, particularly in how industry participants could work together and with ASIC to address persistent challenges, develop innovative solutions, and be informed by the needs and experiences of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples into the future.

- 34 ASIC is developing plans to continue the conversations raised in the workshop including:
- (a) exploring how data collection across the financial system can be developed to align to a clear purpose and relate to monitoring outcomes;
 - (b) identifying and sharing good practices in flexible identification;
 - (c) making available channels to share Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples' experiences of the financial system, including the opportunity to raise challenges; and
 - (d) identifying areas for collaboration to avoid repeating efforts of others.
- 35 ASIC will finalise the Framework and publish it in due course. We will also engage with other financial service sectors on this work, including the superannuation and insurance industry, again in early 2022.

Note: For more information on the consultations and key learnings underpinning the Framework, see Appendix 4: ASIC's Indigenous Financial Services Framework.

ASIC's Reconciliation Action Plans

- 36 Similar to other partners, ASIC has defined our role in and commitment to the reconciliation journey through the development of Reconciliation Action Plans (RAPs).
- 37 ASIC launched its first RAP in 2010, after formally establishing ASIC's IOP in 2009. Since then, ASIC has launched four RAPs, progressing through the Reconciliation Australia RAP framework to a Stretch RAP. ASIC's RAPs have allowed us to articulate and define our unique contribution to the reconciliation movement as Australia's financial services regulator, with a particular focus on ensuring equal and equitable participation in the financial system and markets by Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples.
- 38 ASIC is currently in negotiations with Reconciliation Australia for endorsement of our fifth RAP, a second Stretch RAP, using an outcomes measurement approach to underpin our RAP commitments. This approach will help us measure the impact of ASIC's work towards reconciliation against set outcomes across ASIC teams and aligned with ambitious and meaningful targets. For example, rather than noting the number of cultural safety training sessions we hold, we will survey attendees on how their knowledge has grown or attitudes changed in response to the training.
- 39 Using an outcomes measurement approach will allow us to analyse and monitor the impact of ASIC's work towards reconciliation in an ongoing way and help us to strategically apply resources and effort in areas which are not tracking towards targets.

Note: For more information on ASIC's RAP journey and outcomes measurement approach, see Appendix 5 and Appendix 6 of this submission.

Appendix 4: ASIC's Indigenous Financial Services Framework

Consultation phases

44 Several phases of consultation have been undertaken to date.

Sydney Roundtable event (November 2019)

45 Professor Quiggin and ASIC brought together a small group of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples with expertise in a range of sectors.

46 This consultation provided an accurate framing of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples' position within the economy and their engagement with the financial services industry, taking proper account of the historical and structural context.

47 As part of this framing, ASIC committed to ensuring that Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples' expertise and knowledge are central to the design of ASIC's Indigenous Financial Services Framework.

Financial counsellor and financial capability worker consultations (November 2019–March 2020)

48 ASIC's IOP team consulted one-on-one with financial counsellors and financial capability workers servicing Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples in locations across Australia.

49 These conversations were aimed at identifying local level strengths and challenges affecting the financial wellbeing of these peoples and their communities.

Service provider consultations (March 2020–September 2020)

50 ASIC's IOP team and Professor Quiggin led a combination of face-to-face and virtual consultations with attendees from a range of service providers across various sectors including health, legal services, housing, community programs as well as financial counsellors and capability workers.

51 These service providers were located across urban, regional and remote locations, providing valuable insights and experiences in working with and supporting Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples.

52 The objective of these consultations was to gather insights from these service providers through their observations of how Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples engage with finances and the financial system, including values and priorities applied to managing money and financial decisions.

Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander community consultations (March 2021–April 2021)

- 53 ASIC’s IOP team and Professor Quiggin undertook a series of consultations with members of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities.
- 54 The aim of these consultations was to share the learnings from the consultations undertaken to date and test them with community members to ensure they reflected lived experiences and captured any additional learnings community members considered important.
- 55 This phase of the consultations was vital to ensuring ASIC’s Indigenous Financial Services Framework represents the experiences of community members across urban, regional and remote locations nationally.

Key learnings

- 56 Four fundamental learnings were consistently raised as being integral to strong and positive financial outcomes for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples. These learnings have been incorporated as the Core Elements of ASIC’s Indigenous Financial Services Framework.

The continuing existence of Indigenous economies

- 57 Before colonisation, there were existing, established and thriving economies operating across Australia. These economies were built upon the values held by Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples and resources available.
- 58 While Indigenous economies were significantly affected by colonisation, aspects of these economies continue to operate in Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander families, communities and regions.
- 59 This is seen through the use of money based on values, priorities and responsibilities to others—caring for family, looking after family and thinking of money as a resource to help the whole family not just one person. Failure to acknowledge and accept Indigenous economies and their continued operation results in the values, priorities and aspirations of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples being undervalued and dismissed.

Truth telling about participation in the financial system

- 60 This key learning focuses on building acknowledgement and understanding of historic legislation and policies that dismissed Indigenous economies and subsequent policies that actively excluded Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples from participating in the Australian economy.
- 61 Examples include being paid in rations, having wages quarantined, limited employment options, limited access to formal education and limited access to government supports.

62 The impact of these laws and policies on Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples' experiences and understanding of the financial system, including engagement with financial products and services, is very recent and continues to affect families and communities today.

63 It also means that there have been limited opportunities to draw knowledge from those among whom traditional knowledge is held, as these people have been directly excluded from involvement in the economy.

Overall wellbeing and the interconnectedness of money

64 This key learning highlights the effect that money has on all aspects of an individual's wellbeing and the wellbeing of their families and communities.

65 For Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples and communities in particular, a 'siloed' approach to the provision of financial services fails to acknowledge and understand the interconnectedness of money and its impact on all other aspects of wellbeing (e.g. the connection between finances and mental and physical health).

66 The various aspects of the financial system often do not have embedded understanding of Indigenous histories and experiences. This makes it more difficult for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples to navigate, gain access to and engage with services across the financial system as well as a raft of other wellbeing services.

67 Understanding this interconnectedness and developing procedures with this understanding in mind will result in a holistic approach to challenges experienced and goals held. On the other hand, addressing only one aspect of an individual, family or communities' wellbeing is unlikely to increase overall wellbeing of the individual, family or communities.

Achieving 'Success Our Way'

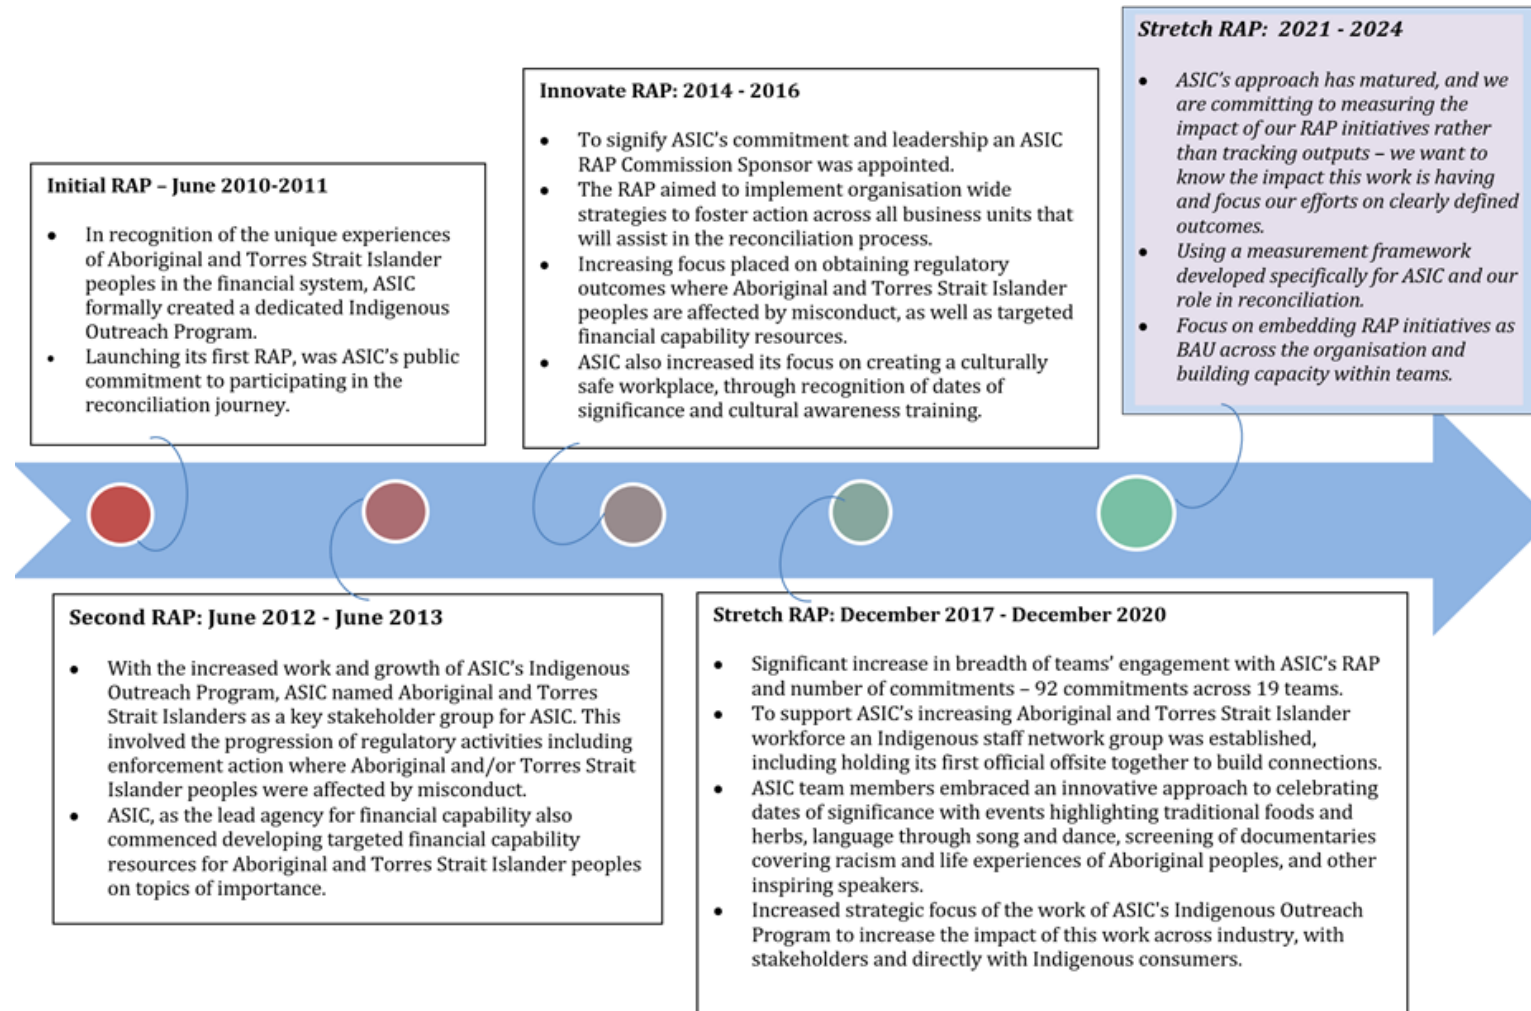

68 The strength and resilience of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples continue. These peoples and their communities will continue to apply values and priorities that are important to them in managing finances and financial decision making. An increased understanding of these values and priorities by the financial services industry and service providers is needed so that products, programs and services can be adapted and provided appropriately.

69 While there is diversity, Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples' view of 'Success Our Way' is driven by Indigenous values and priorities, caring for family across kinship structures and empowering future generations.

70 Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples have strong aspirations for the future. Stakeholder groups can support these consumers in achieving 'Success Our Way' by embedding a stronger understanding of these perspectives and aspirations into how they engage with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples and communities.
