

To Honourable Senators

Once an application has been received by the immigration authority should be justify on the basis of the merits of the application not the situation change in the job market or financial crisis. If the applicant submit any false documents or do any types of dodgy things then the application should be refused.

I believe the government body or immigration ministry is not like insurance company or mobile company or corporate body which make a commitment to the consumers and offer benefits and features and at the end of the brochure they write “conditions apply” which means rip off the people in systematic way.

Those who applied for residency already, it took them 2-5 years to complete the study and others formalities. A big number of applicants are waiting more than two years. That means if the result is negative, all the efforts and hard work will go in vain for them.

They could do something else to build their career, their future life.

I agree to cap the visas according to the needs of Australia but it should be when accepting the application. Authority should not accept the application if they don't need that types of skilled people.
