

Dear sir / madam

I am a uni student studying law. I just want to express some opinions of my own regarding the Migration Amendment (Visa Capping) Bill 2010
[Provisions]

I searched on Google to find out what are the characteristics of law? Then I got the answer quickly. Law is to bring justice and order to a society. Is this visa capping bill fair enough to be written as legislation? Of course not, it breaks up the basic rules of the General Migration Program.

According to this visa capping bill, any application might be treated as void one at any time which is absolutely unfair to these applicants. This also means these applicants don't have any specific legal system to rely on because this Migration Amendment gives immigration officer right to cap particular section or subclass visa at any time. It will confuse a lot of potential applicants.

This amendment will also threaten our education industry even increase the unemployment rate of several relevant industries such as travel industry, carting industry. Because most of potential international students will chose US, UK as their destination rather than Australia.

Australia as a developed country in the world, our government should demonstrate their spirit of justice and fair judgment.

Kind regards
