

I am extremely concerned that the changes in the environment which I have experienced for the past 70 years are, seemingly, being ignored by people who are in a position to legislate effectively to bring about practical solutions. What is worrying is that scientific predictions, which have been published for several decades have been ignored by our elected representatives and it would seem that we are now approaching an irreversible situation regarding an effective solution to global warming. Although it will not affect me, I am disgusted that future generations will face an uncertain future because of the actions of those who have put profits before the planet.

Eileen Whitehead