As a consumer I need to know my food is prepared in the most hygienic way possible. I need to know where it was produced and by whom. I need to know what additives are in it and how old it is. As a civilised human being I accept animals will be killed for my consumption but insist they are born and breed in the most humane way possible, and killed in the most humane way possible. Animals are born to live their lives on farms, they are not sailors and do not belong on ships. Live trade may be very lucrative and demand high. Blond virgins are also in great demand and very valuable but we do not round them up and sell them. Civilised people respect other living beings be they human or animals.

It's not hard to figure out right from wrong, or do we need Jesus to come and remind us?

Yours faithfully

Jim Heath
