JOINT SELECT COMMITTEE ON THE ABORIGINAL AND TORRES STRAIT ISLANDER VOICE

SUBMISSION

D.F. Jackson AM KC

A. INTRODUCTION

1. I thank the Joint Select Committee for inviting me to make a written submission on the referendum proposals for the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Voice. I am happy to appear in person at a hearing of the Joint Select Committee if it so desires.
2. My experience in constitutional and related political matters is referred to in the accompanying letter. Two particular aspects I would mention are:
 - (a) that I do not belong to any political party; and
 - (b) that I have acted as counsel in the High Court both for and against the interests of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples.
3. The proposed constitutional amendment would add to the text of the Constitution a further Chapter (Chapter IX) in the following terms¹:

“Chapter IX Recognition of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Peoples

129 Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Voice

In recognition of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples as the First Peoples of Australia:

1. There shall be a body, to be called the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Voice;
2. The Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Voice may make representations to the Parliament and the Executive Government of the Commonwealth on matters relating to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples;
3. The Parliament shall, subject to this Constitution, have power to make laws with respect to matters relating to the Aboriginal and Torres Strait

¹ A consequential addition to the Constitution’s Table of Provisions would also be made. It does not require separate comment.

Islander Voice, including its composition, functions, powers and procedures.”

4. The proposed referendum question to be put to voters is as follows:

“A Proposed Law: to alter the Constitution to recognise the First Peoples of Australia by establishing an Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Voice.

Do you approve this proposed alteration?”

B. SOME PRELIMINARY OBSERVATIONS

5. No doubt different minds will have different views whether there should be some recognition in the Constitution of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples (I will use “First Peoples” from time to time for brevity). Assuming, however, that there is to be such recognition, the core question, however, is the form which such recognition should take.
6. It will be seen that the scheme contemplated by the proposed s. 129 involves the following elements:
- (a) Proposed s. 129(1) mandates that there is to be – until s. 129(1) is itself amended or repealed by a later referendum process at some point in the future – a body which is the Voice.
 - (b) By proposed s. 129(2) the Voice referred to in proposed s. 129(1) may make “representations” (submissions or arguments or proposals) to the Commonwealth Parliament and the Executive Government of the Commonwealth on “matters relating to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples”. Two aspects may be noted in passing. One is that proposed s. 129(2) excludes, sensibly, representations to the judicial branch of the Commonwealth. The other is that the “representations” referred to in proposed s. 129(2) are not necessarily reactive; there seems no reason why they should not include new proposals by the Voice for measures or action.
 - (c) The proposed s 129(3) sensibly gives very broad powers to the Parliament to determine, amongst other things, the composition, functions, powers and procedures of the Voice required to be established by proposed s. 129(1). No doubt there will be difficult questions arising for Parliament under proposed s 129(3). For example decisions will need to be made about the composition of the Voice. Will First Peoples resident in the Australian Capital Territory² be entitled to representation, perhaps membership, of the Voice on the same basis as First Peoples residing in the Northern Territory? Will Parliamentarians be excluded from participation in the Voice? These issues are by no means insoluble, however.

7. Greater potential difficulty is provided by the phrase “subject to this Constitution” in proposed s 129(3). That usage would ordinarily cause no difficulty, but one provision which would be likely to fall within it would be the proposed s 129(2). If a law made pursuant to s 129(3) had the effect that the Voice (however constituted under s 129(3)) was not empowered to make a representation of the nature referred to in s 129(2), the relevant provisions enacted pursuant to s 129(2) would be invalid.
8. A further question is what happens if the Parliament does not continue to make laws under proposed s 129(3) providing for the continued existence of the Voice. Is the Voice contemplated by ss 129(1) and (2) to fall into a form of constitutional desuetude like the Inter-State Commission under ss 101, 102, 103, with there being attempts every so often to revive a version of it?
9. Or if there is at any time no legislation providing for the Voice, but Parliament proceeds to make laws on “matters relating to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples”, are such laws invalid because the proposed s. 129(1) requires that there be a Voice, however constituted, which is able to make representations to Parliament on such matters?

C. VIEWS

10. The discussion above allows me to express relatively briefly my views on the amendment to the Constitution now proposed.
11. The first observation I would make is that in the light of the Parliament’s existing legislative powers under ss 51(xxvi), 122 and 51(xxxix) of the Constitution the proposed Chapter IX seems quite unnecessary.

² A significant number of whom are likely to work in government.

12. Under s 51(xxvi) of the Constitution the Commonwealth Parliament already has power to make laws with respect to:

“(xxvi) the people of any race for whom it is deemed necessary to make special laws”.
13. Under s 122, so far as the territories are concerned, the Constitution already provides relevantly that:

“122. The Parliament may make laws for the government of any territory surrendered by any State to and accepted by the Commonwealth, or of any territory placed by the Queen under the authority of and accepted by the Commonwealth, or otherwise acquired by the Commonwealth...”.
14. And under s 51(xxxix) laws may be made by the Commonwealth Parliament with respect to:

“(xxxix) matters incidental to the execution of any power vested by this Constitution in the Parliament ... or in the Government of the Commonwealth ... or in any department or officer of the Commonwealth.”
15. It cannot be seriously argued that s 51(xxvi) is not widely enough expressed to empower the making of laws creating and regulating a body of the nature contemplated by the proposed referendum. Any such law of its nature would be a law with respect to the people of a race (in fact two races - Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander) and it would be a “special law” which the Parliament has “deemed necessary” for the people of those races. This view is supported by the decisions discussing s 51(xxvi). Thus it is for the Commonwealth Parliament to determine whether a law is “deemed necessary”: Western Australia v The Commonwealth (1995) 183 CLR 373 at 460 per Mason C.J., Brennan, Deane, Toohey, Gaudron and McHugh JJ.
16. Whilst s 122 is to be read with other provisions of the Constitution: (Queanbeyan City Council v. ACTEW Corporation Ltd (2011) 244 CLR 530 at 539, [7] per French CJ, Gummow, Hayne, Crennan, Kiefel and Bell JJ) it seems clear that the Commonwealth Parliament has very broad legislative powers on the subject presently under consideration in relation to the Territories, whether it be pursuant to s. 51(xxvi) or s. 122 or both.

17. And one can add the “incidental” legislative power conferred by s 51(xxxix).
18. The short fact is that there is no reason at all why the Parliament cannot now legislate to establish a body which has features similar to those proposed for the Voice in proposed s 129.
19. If that is the case, what is the point of a referendum to insert a further legislative power in the Constitution? I can understand the desire to give some recognition to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islanders in the Constitution, but why could this not be done simply enough by adding a third paragraph to the Preamble to the Constitution along the following lines:

“And whereas the Aboriginal peoples of Australia and those originating from the Torres Straits were the first inhabitants of the lands which are the Commonwealth of Australia”.

The above suggestion is conceptual, rather than an exact proposal. No doubt it could be better drafted.
20. I also accept that much does need to be improve the lot of many, though not all, of the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people in Australia. It can be done already through the use of the legislative powers referred to above, and by suitable government action.
21. One point which appears to be made in support of the proposed amendment is that it ensures that there will always be a Voice. But why should there be, in perpetuity, a Voice entrenched constitutionally? No very satisfactory answer has ever emerged.
22. One answer has been that Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples are not happy with recognition in the Preamble, but want more. But the issue is what the people of Australia want. Suitable recognition of the First Peoples in the Preamble, together with governmental action appropriate from time to time should be sufficient.
23. There is also a second aspect, albeit having some relationship to the first.

24. The inclusion of the proposed s 129 would mean that we become a nation where, whenever we or our ancestors first came to this country³, we are not all equal.
25. Surely the way in which the joint aims of recognition of the First Peoples on the one hand and equality of all Australians on the other is as suggested above, i.e. an amendment to the Preamble to the Constitution along the lines of that discussed above. The government of the day could then make such provisions as become, or remain, necessary to ensure that the lot of those First Peoples needing assistance is satisfactorily dealt with.
