

To whom it may concern,

I am writing to you about the proposed Migration Amendment (Strengthening Biometrics Integrity) Bill 2015. While I understand the need to prevent criminals from entering our society and applaud the effort to do so, I am concerned that this may lead to genuine refugees being refused entry if it is not possible to source baseline data to compare to that taken on arrival. I wonder if there are alternative ways in which we could keep criminals and terrorists out, while not penalising the innocent.

Yours sincerely,

Rebecca Pearce
