Question:

Is the Government using this opportunity to target support services towards people with existing gambling habits and people at-risk of developing addictive gambling behaviours?

Answer:

On 29 March 2020, the Australian Government announced a $200 million Community Support Package (Package) commencing immediately over two years (from 2019-20 to 2020-21) to support vulnerable Australians impacted by coronavirus.

Under this package, $20 million has been provided for financial counselling services and supports, with over $1.8 million to 33 Problem Gambling Financial counselling services.

This is in addition to the funding the Government already provides for financial counsellors to help people, their families and friends affected by problem gambling. In 2018-19, 33 community organisations delivered support to 9,133 individual and group clients in every state and territory, with a particular focus on areas with high numbers of electronic gaming machines and socio-economic disadvantages.

Financial Counselling for Problem Gambling service providers can be found at the Department of Social Services Grants Service Directory at <https://serviceproviders.dss.gov.au/>.

Also, the National Debt Helpline provides a single contact point for people to access financial counselling, either immediately on the phone or via referral to face-to-face services. Services are voluntary, free and confidential. Further information is available at <https://ndh.org.au/> or by calling 1800 007 007.

Across Australia, counselling for gamblers and their families can be accessed by calling the National Gambling Helpline on 1800 858 858 or through Gambling Help Online at www.gamblinghelponline.org.au.

As part of the joint Commonwealth, state and territory National Consumer Protection Framework for online wagering (National Framework) in Australia 10 measures have been developed to reduce the harm that can be caused by online wagering to consumers. These measures provide people with easy-to-use tools and information to better control their gambling from a voluntary opt-out pre-commitment scheme and activity statements through to a national self-exclusion register (NSER), which will enable those experiencing gambling harm to immediately exclude themselves from services offered by all interactive wagering service providers.
