Question 1

The Committee asked:

Chair: With Sydney and Melbourne and these growth corridors—my electorate is in an outer growth corridor as well—you said they are being used in a way there. The Productivity Commission suggested they would be used for whole-growth corridors—100 kilometres outside Melbourne I think was one of the examples they spoke to us about—for a whole strategic assessment process. But that is not happening again, is it? You are talking about individualised projects or certain growth centres? How they currently being used?

Dr Dripps: They are being used for quite large areas. The Melbourne strategic assessment—if I can recall, because I do not have the notes here—started in 2007 and was a strategic assessment of the Melbourne at 2030 policy of the Victorian government. It covered construction of 286,000 houses for a population of, I think, five million people. We might take that on notice to provide you with some more information about that strategic assessment.

Answer:

A strategic assessment of Melbourne's urban growth boundaries commenced formally in 2008. The urban growth areas occupy about 40 000 hectares on the outskirts of Melbourne, generally within approximately 40 kilometres of Melbourne CBD. The Program of development and conservation commitments that was endorsed under the strategic assessment is known as 'Delivering Melbourne's Newest Sustainable Communities'. The Program is expected to deliver over 350 000 new households supporting one million people, 15 major town centres, 85 local town centres and 350 000 new jobs. The value of the Program is estimated at approximately $50 billion (2013). Approval for urban development in 28 precincts was granted in 2010 and in three of the four new growth corridors in 2013. An approval for the fourth growth corridor, in Melbourne's South East, is under consideration (as at 1 April 2014).

The proposed urban expansion will result in the loss of native vegetation and habitat for listed threatened species and ecological communities, with the loss of up to 4 665 hectares of natural temperate grasslands listed as critically endangered under the Environment Protection and Biodiversity Conservation Act 1999 (EPBC Act).

Key conservation outcomes of the endorsed Program include:

- A new Western Grassland Reserve to the west of Melbourne of 15 000 hectares.
- A new Grassy Woodland Reserve to the north of Melbourne of 1 200 hectares.
- A system of 36 conservation areas within the growth corridors totalling 5 735 hectares.

The Western Grassland Reserve will protect the largest concentration of remaining natural temperate grassland in the Victorian Volcanic Plain Bioregion. In addition to grasslands, the reserves also cover a broad range of other habitat types including ephemeral wetlands, waterways, rocky knolls and open grassy woodlands and have been designed in their establishment and management to provide sufficient habitat to support a number of nationally listed threatened species.

Conservation outcomes, including reserve acquisition and ongoing management, have been costed by the Victorian Government at about $1 billion. These commitments will be funded through cost recovery as development occurs using a mixture of prescribed flat fees and calculated offsets. The consolidated approach to the grassland reserves provides a means to achieve economies of scale in reserve management and establishment.

The approval conditions for urban development in the new growth areas require the conservation areas to remain unaltered (unless agreed by the Commonwealth). The conditions also reinforce compliance with the offset mechanisms given their importance in providing the funding stream to achieve the conservation outcomes.

Question 2

The Committee asked:

Mr ZAPPIA: Is there the ability to review a strategic assessment once it has been done, and are they subject to regular reviews?

Dr Dripps: Yes there is that ability. I will it take on notice for us to provide you with the detail of the review periods of the strategic assessments that we have completed. That would be better than relying on my memory.

Answer:

Yes. Strategic assessments are subjected to review by the Department following endorsement and/or a class of actions approval.

The Department also requires an independent audit to be periodically conducted (typically every five years) for the life of the strategic assessment approval to ensure commitments made within the endorsed policy, plan or program and/or conditions of approval are being adhered to and conservation outcomes for matters of national environmental significance are being achieved.

The review and reporting mechanisms associated with completed strategic assessments are summarised in Table 1 below.

Question 6

The Committee asked:

CHAIR: What guidance would you say is given to departmental officers on the balance between regulatory efficiency and environmental protection, from the department's point of view?

Dr Dripps: What kind of training is given?

CHAIR: Guidance, or training. Do you instruct your officers to have regard for a balance between these considerations?

Dr Dripps: Yes, of course.

CHAIR: Is it formal? Is it training, or is it advice?

Dr Dripps: ... we could probably take it on notice.

Answer:

The Department is committed to a program of activities to build analytical capacity throughout the organisation. The Department's economic capacity building programme includes: running seminars and events; developing a range of education products; providing on-request economic advice; internal and external economic networks; and promoting relevant external training courses.

As an example, senior departmental executives participated in a HC Coombs Forum on Smart Regulation hosted by the Australian National University on 19 February 2014, and invited Professor Neil Gunningham to give a seminar open to all staff on the same topic on 26 March 2014.

The portfolio's Deregulation Unit has also developed guidance material to staff, held seminars and smaller group meetings with staff in line areas across the portfolio to discuss the balance between environmental outcomes and regulatory burden.

Question 7

The Committee asked:

CHAIR: Given that it [the water trigger amendment] is unable to be put into the one-stop shop, I guess my next question would be: as I understand it this amendment went through without a regulatory impact assessment from government at the time. Is there any progress underway that you are aware of towards a regulatory impact statement for this particular amendment?

Dr Dripps: There is a requirement to review the operation of the amendment and produce such a document within the first two years of its operation. That review is in the planning stages at the moment.

CHAIR: How long has it been since the amendment? Is it a year?

Dr Dripps: It passed in June last year.

CHAIR: So almost a year. Is there a regulatory impact assessment process underway or not?

Dr Dripps: I know there is some preliminary work that has been undertaken but I do not want to mislead you in terms of the progress, so we might have to take that one on notice.

(Hansard, 27 March 2014, page 8)

Answer:

The Department will be undertaking a post-implementation review of the Environment Protection and Biodiversity Conservation Amendment Act 2013, also known as the water trigger. All Australian Government agencies are required to undertake a post-implementation review of regulation introduced without a Regulatory Impact Statement. The explanatory memorandum to the Environment Protection and Biodiversity Conservation Amendment Act 2013 states that the review will take place within two years of introduction of the amendments. The post-implementation review is in the initial planning stages.

Question 8

The Committee asked:

Mr BROAD: In the implementation of the water trigger, and a little bit of retrospective history: the stakeholder engagement with the farm sector—what was the response to Windsor's amendment?

Dr Dripps: I would have to look that up. There was a range of different responses from different parts of the farming sector. I cannot recall exactly which parts of the farming sector said that yes, they think it is a good idea and which parts said no, they thought it was a terrible idea. But I do remember there were both.

(Hansard, 27 March 2014, page 9)

Answer:

Farmers generally welcomed the water trigger as a move to strengthen federal environment protections for water resources impacted by coal seam gas and large coal mining developments.

The National Farmers Federation made a submission to the Senate Standing Committee on Environment and Communications inquiry into the Environment Protection and Biodiversity Conservation Amendment Bill 2013. The submission welcomed the intent of the legislation, but also expressed concerns about the legislation's potential to target agriculture in the future. The Windsor amendment was not specifically referred to in the submission.

Question 9

The Committee asked:

CHAIR: ...Are you aware of any other triggers that affect the one-stop shop process in this way due to other federal acts? I know we asked a few questions like this, but are there any other particular acts that you are aware of?...

Dr Dripps: The ones that we have come across that we are actively analysing at the moment are the Sea Dumping Act and its interaction with the EPBC Act. And we are working very closely with the Great Barrier Reef Marine Park Authority, which is required to give permits for activities within the Great Barrier Reef Marine Park area, to look at how their current processes of single permitting with Queensland work and whether any changes ought to be made to make sure that people are not having a one-stop shop for the EPBC Act and then running into the Great Barrier Reef Marine Park Act.

I would expect as we progress with the negotiations that there may be others that we encounter. As we encounter them we are looking at whether it is necessary for them to exist.

CHAIR: Can we ask you to provide us with that? If you come across them in the course of your inquiries—would that be an appropriate request?

Dr Dripps: I suspect that we might find them after your inquiry has finished. What is your reporting date?

CHAIR: We do not have reporting date yet.

Dr Dripps: Well, then, we definitely will inform you.
