

Migration Amendment (Visa Capping) Bill 2010

Australia needs man power. Although Australia is developed country but still development is limited to main cities only and when we go past these cities there are huge jungles. With 22million population its not possible to make developments everywhere. So this is sure that Australia needs people.

Now the question is what sort of people are needed. Skilled workers or Refugees or People without skills. If I talk about people without skills they are not really productive. On the other hand I feel refugees are from countries where peace is not there. Some people genuinely need asylum while others are probably having criminal past. They people are not use to of living in such a good environment Australia is providing. Sooner or Later they again become criminals last years some people tried to do in Sydney what they actually were doing in their countries.

So we need to decide which visa should be capped? If we get skilled workers more than demand. We still can keep them. We can push them to low population areas. These people are really hard working and able to get additional skills if needed. They are productive and they pay tax to government and helps in the prosperity of a country. Sooner or later skilled workers will get jobs. Students who have studied here also brought wealth and so created so many jobs. They have left their countries for better future. Australia can definitely give them better future. So rather than capping the skilled visa they should be asked to live in low population area where development is needed and also new cities should be developed. So that Australia can become a completely developed country.
