

Dear Sir,

We want to object about the windfarm that will be situated in this area. We feel that they will be too close to homes and the health of many will be affected. There are thousands of km of open desert in Australia so there is no reason to have turbines in and around farming areas.

The reason we came to live in the country was to live in peace and quiet that is what country means. If we wanted noise we would move close to a highway.

Two years ago we travelled to U.S.A and in California when we went from L.A. to Vegas we passed a windfarm of four and a half thousand turbines but not a soul lived there, it was the middle of the desert. Very impressive. I am sure that we could do the same.

If these turbines are not a problem then why are they not situated in every park and garden around Melbourne. Melbourne uses much more electricity than country folk. The government always promises to make things better for the country but I am still waiting to see this happen.

Yours hoping sense prevails.

Liz Diamond.
