

Dear

This is Sandeep who has lodged GSM onshore application. As Mr. Evans said on radio interview that he has seen too many applications being lodged in certain occupations, and where people would otherwise have no chance of being granted visas. On the behalf of his saying I would like to have request to the Australian government that how government can save all of international students from visa capping by providing them residencies in the long term rather than terminate all the applications. As all we know that immigration has got lots of applications which include cooks, hair dressers, accountants, etc and our economy is not ready to provide placements to all the applicants at this stage although Economy would be able to provide good placements in the short or longterm time. There are some reasons behind it, for example, Australian economy would need more chefs or hairdressers in next five to ten years time.

It is about 1,40,000 students who have applied for GSM on shore in last couple of years & they have spent their precious times, good amount of money and also have done hard work at jobs as well as at universities. So, at the end if they get termination that means they have wasted their brains, skills, energy, money & time here.

I have a request that government should think about this bill before it comes into effect because it would give big loss to the economy then there would be very rare students from overseas who would knock the door of Australian education system.

I would look forward to your reply.

Kind Regards
Sandeep.
