I work in an area of substantial low income earners and families that are very itinerate. We all work hard to improve the learning outcomes of all our students but when you have students who may attend for as few as 6 days per term it is difficult to keep learning consistent and for them to "perform" at acceptable levels. Not only that but we had 50% of our students move to another school last year and a different 50% enrol. These types of factors are not taken into account when you publish the NAPLAN results which are then used to judge our schools, teachers and students.
