

Hello Sir/Madam,

This morning I just come to know about Migration Amendment (visa capping) Bill 2010 and it just shocked me. How come a Government who think about the welfare of public, can destroy the life of thousand GSM applicants who spend lot of money to make applications and most precious years of their life. I appreciate that Government want to make changes for welfare of Country, but it does not mean that we leave thousands of people to die with stress. What applicants will do when their applications will be terminated? Defiantly most of them will be on roads, how they will start their life from beginning in their home countries? Is it really easy to start life from beginning? Who will be responsible for this stage and who will support them? What about their talent which they got in Australia? As human being we can't do this with them. Government can do some other change like we did now as new SOL list. I think we should stop receiving new applications with skills which we don't need in Australia but have to consider old applications even government can cease offshore applications because they people are still in their countries. But it will be hard to settle down again in their home countries for the people who are already in Australia, Government need to be fair with onshore GSM applicants. They people will contribute in Australia's economy and values. Do not put this image in their minds that Australia is not fair country for overseas students and Australia left thousand people on road by terminating their application, it will damage Australia's image. So make alternatives and be fair for Onshore GSM applicants who are already in Australia. I hope that my views will be considered.

Thank Very Much
