

Dear Sirs.

I purchased a property in Queensland to retire to, and so not draw on the pension. A few months after purchase, the Queensland government brought in legislation which prevented me from clearing any of my land, which I own in estate fee simple. I then made enquiries about the compensation that was made available, but it was determined that I am not eligible. So I now own a piece of land covered with mostly regrowth, that I can effectively do nothing with, am not able to get compensation, and am unable to sell to recover my investment. The government has stolen my rights given to me by the estate in fee simple title. I want my rights back! Or at least fair compensation for what has been stolen from me.

Rob Haeusler