Introduction

- 1.1 The Department of Employment (the department) welcomes the opportunity to make a written submission to the Senate Education and Employment Legislation Committee (the Committee) inquiry into the Fair Work Amendment (Remaining 2014 Measures) Bill 2015 (the Bill).
- 1.2 The measures included in the Bill are the same as the measures that were introduced in the Fair Work Amendment Bill 2014 and subsequently removed by amendment in the Senate. As such, this submission largely replicates the department's submission to the Committee's inquiry into the Fair Work Amendment Bill 2014.
- 1.3 The Fair Work Act 2009 (Cth) (Fair Work Act) and the Fair Work Regulations 2009 (Cth) (Fair Work Regulations) provide the legislative framework underpinning the national workplace relations system, which covers the majority of Australian workplaces.
- 1.4 The Coalition's Policy to Improve the Fair Work Laws (the Policy), released in May 2013, includes a commitment to amend the Fair Work Act to build on and improve the existing workplace relations system to provide a stable, fair and prosperous future for all Australians.
- 1.5 The Policy specifically provides for, amongst other things, improvements to the areas of right of entry, greenfields agreement negotiations, industrial action and individual flexibility arrangements. It also commits to maintaining the value of monies held for underpaid workers and implementing a number of outstanding recommendations of the 2012 post-implementation review of the Fair Work Act (Fair Work Act Review 2012).
- 1.6 To give effect to these commitments, the Australian Government introduced the Fair Work Amendment Bill 2014 into the House of Representatives on 27 February 2014. The Fair Work Amendment Bill 2014, which received Royal Assent on 26 November 2015, amended the Fair Work Act to:
 - Extend good faith bargaining to the negotiation of greenfields agreements and provide an optional six month negotiation timeframe for the parties to reach agreement. Where agreement cannot be reached in those circumstances, the employer is able to take its agreement to the Fair Work Commission for approval. In addition to the existing approval tests, there is a new requirement in these circumstances to ensure that the agreement is consistent with prevailing industry standards.
 - Provide for the Fair Work Ombudsman to maintain the value of monies held for underpaid workers.
 - Implement two recommendations of the Fair Work Act Review 2012 to provide that:
 - a request for extended unpaid parental leave cannot be refused unless the employer has given the employee a reasonable opportunity to discuss the request, and

- an application for a protected action ballot can only be made once bargaining for a proposed enterprise agreement has commenced.

1.7 The Fair Work Amendment (Remaining 2014 Measures) Bill 2015 contains the remaining provisions of the Fair Work Amendment Bill 2014 that were removed by amendment in the Senate. The Bill, which gives effect to the Coalition's remaining pre-election policies, was introduced into the House of Representatives on 3 December 2015, and will amend the Fair Work Act to:

- Provide new criteria for when a union may exercise right of entry for discussion purposes, give the Fair Work Commission greater powers to deal with right of entry frequency disputes and repeal amendments to the right of entry provisions made by the Fair Work Amendment Act 2013.
- Enhance the operation of individual flexibility arrangements by:
 - confirming that non-monetary benefits can be taken into account when determining whether an employee is better off overall than the employee would have been if no individual flexibility arrangement were agreed to,
 - providing an employer with a defence to an alleged contravention of a flexibility term where, at the time an individual flexibility arrangement was made, the employer reasonably believed that the requirements of the flexibility term were complied with, so far as the requirements were applicable to the arrangement,
 - extending the notice period to unilaterally terminate an individual flexibility arrangement made under an enterprise agreement to 13 weeks,
 - requiring flexibility terms in enterprise agreements to include, as a minimum, that individual flexibility arrangements may deal with the following matters: when work is performed, overtime rates, penalty rates, allowances and leave loading, to the extent these matters are covered in the agreement, and
 - requiring a statement setting out that the arrangement meets the employees genuine needs and results in them being better off overall.
- Implement a number of recommendations of the Fair Work Act Review 2012 that were not implemented by the previous government. The changes will provide that:
 - an employee cannot take or accrue leave under the Fair Work Act during a period in which the employee is absent from work and in receipt of workers' compensation,
 - annual leave loading is not payable on termination of employment unless a modern award or enterprise agreement expressly provides to that effect,
 - industrial instruments do not transfer in a transfer of business with workers who transfer on their own initiative between employers that are associated entities, and
 - the Fair Work Commission has clearer powers to dismiss unfair dismissal applications without conducting a hearing or conference in certain circumstances, subject to procedural safeguards.

Regulation Impact Statement

- 1.8 The department prepared an options-stage Regulation Impact Statement covering measures in the Fair Work Act Amendment Bill 2014 deemed to have a regulatory impact. On 12 December 2013, the Office of Best Practice Regulation (OBPR) agreed to the estimated regulatory costs and offsets included in the options-stage Regulation Impact Statement in accordance with regulatory impact analysis requirements.
- 1.9 The Regulation Impact Statement for Fair Work Amendment Bill 2014 covers the current Bill. The Regulation Impact Statement can be accessed from the OBPR website at: <http://ris.dpmc.gov.au/2014/03/19/amendments-to-the-fair-work-act-2009-details-stage-regulation-impact-statement-department-of-employment/>.
- 1.10 Stakeholders represented on the National Workplace Relations Consultative Council (NWRCC), its subcommittee the Committee on Industrial Legislation, and state and territory government senior officials were consulted on the options-stage Regulation Impact statement and the draft Fair Work Amendment Bill 2014.
- 1.11 The department subsequently prepared a details-stage Regulation Impact Statement covering measures in the Bill deemed to have a regulatory impact. The OBPR formally approved the Regulation Impact Statement, including the agreed regulatory costs and offsets, on 18 February 2014.
- 1.12 As outlined in the Regulation Impact Statement, the estimated red tape reductions and cost savings for Australian businesses and the economy from measures included in the 2015 Bill is $5,692,138 per year over ten years. A link to the Regulation Impact Statement was published with the Explanatory Memorandum to the Bill in accordance with regulatory impact analysis requirements.

Consultation

- 1.13 Consultation on the Fair Work Amendment Bill 2014 was primarily undertaken through four mechanisms.
- 1.14 A meeting of the Select Council on Workplace Relations, which comprises state and territory ministers with responsibility for workplace relations, was held on 1 November 2013 and chaired by the Minister for Employment. At this meeting the then Minister advised members of the range of reforms outlined in the Policy to be implemented and members were invited to provide their input on the reforms. Members noted the Government's commitment to amend the Fair Work Act and to consult the states and territories on the changes.
- 1.15 A meeting of the NWRCC, which comprises peak bodies representing employers and employees, was held on 25 November 2013 and also chaired by the former Minister. The Minister advised members of the Government's intention to implement changes to the Fair Work Act outlined in its Policy and invited their feedback on the proposed changes.

- 1.16 At a subsequent NWRCC meeting on 31 January 2014, the former Minister provided specific detail on the Policy and sought comment from members. Members also provided feedback on the options-stage Regulation Impact Statement, which was taken into account in the preparation of the details-stage Regulation Impact Statement.
- 1.17 The Committee on Industrial Legislation was consulted on a draft of the Bill during confidential sessions facilitated by the department on 4 February 2014. Members provided technical feedback on the draft legislation and amendments were made in a number of areas in response.
- 1.18 State and territory senior officials with responsibility for workplace relations were consulted and provided feedback on the draft legislation and options-stage Regulation Impact Statement at a Senior Officials' Meeting on 4 February 2014.
- 1.19 As noted above, a number of measures in the Bill were recommendations of the Fair Work Act Review 2012. There was an extensive consultation process undertaken during that Review and the previous Government consulted on its recommendations, including with the Select Council on Workplace Relations and the NWRCC.

Changes to the operation of the Fair Work Act 2009

Part 3-4 – Right of entry

Existing framework

- 2.1 Part 3-4 of the Fair Work Act establishes a right of entry framework under which union officials may enter premises for investigation and discussion purposes. The object of this part of the Act is to create a framework that appropriately balances the rights of organisations to represent their members in the workplace, the right of employees to be represented at work and the right of employers and occupiers of premises to go about their business without undue inconvenience.

Key measures in the Bill

- 2.2 The Policy includes the commitment to model the right of entry rules on those in place before the Fair Work Act commenced, citing undertakings of the former government that right of entry would stay the same under the Fair Work Act.
- 2.3 The Bill implements the Government's commitment to restore balance to the right of entry provisions. The amendments include:
- Providing new criteria for when a permit holder may enter a workplace for discussion purposes,
 - Expanding the Fair Work Commission's capacity to deal with disputes about the frequency of visits to premises for discussion purposes,
 - Reinstating the rules on location of interviews and discussions in place before the amendments made by the Fair Work Amendment Act 2013, and
 - Repealing amendments made by the Fair Work Amendment Act 2013 requiring employers to provide transport and accommodation to permit holders seeking to access remote work sites.
- 2.4 The changes are expected to reduce the burden facing employers under the current right of entry arrangements.

Right of entry for discussion purposes

- 2.5 Currently under the Fair Work Act, a permit holder has the right to enter a workplace to hold discussions only if the union is entitled to represent the industrial interests of the employees at the workplace. This was an expansion of the union right of entry access rules which were in place under the predecessor Workplace Relations Act 1996. The Workplace Relations Act 1996 provided that a union's right of entry was dependent on the union being bound by an award or agreement that covered the relevant workers. The Fair Work Act changes have led to increased right of entry visits by unions to many workplaces as well as demarcation disputes between unions over coverage of particular workplaces.

- 2.6 The Bill amends the right of entry provisions to require that permit holders can only enter a workplace for discussion purposes if the permit holder's union is covered by an enterprise agreement or if the union is invited to send a representative to the workplace by an employee. The requirement that the union must be eligible to represent the industrial interests of the employees is retained under the proposed amendments.
- 2.7 The amendments will mean that the right of entry rules are largely unchanged for unions covered by an enterprise agreement. For unions not covered by a relevant enterprise agreement, it will simply mean that at least one worker must request that the union meet with them in the workplace before a permit holder can enter for discussion purposes.
- 2.8 The Bill includes the capacity for a union to apply to the Fair Work Commission for an 'invitation certificate' to allow employees to remain anonymous, should they wish, if an employer requests proof of an invitation to the workplace. The Fair Work Commission must issue a certificate if it is satisfied that a worker the union is entitled to represent, has invited the union to the workplace to meet with workers. An invitation certificate is not required if the employee is happy to identify themselves to the employer as having invited the union.

Frequency of visits disputes

- 2.9 Stakeholder submissions to the Fair Work Act Review 2012 indicated that the right of entry provisions of the Fair Work Act increased the frequency of right of entry visits for discussion purposes. This has led to additional costs for some employers due to excessive visits by some unions as well as disputes between unions over eligibility to represent employees. For example, the Fair Work Act Review 2012 noted that during the construction phase of BHP Billiton's Worsley Alumina plant, visits by permit holders increased from zero in 2007 to 676 visits in 2010 alone (p.193 of the Fair Work Act Review 2012). The Australian Industry Group also submitted that 37 per cent of employers it surveyed in August 2011 had experienced more frequent right of entry visits since the Fair Work Act commenced.
- 2.10 More recently, in its submission to the Productivity Commission Inquiry into the Workplace Relations Framework, the Australian Mines and Metals Association highlighted the experience of one member who had received 140 right of entry requests on their project, with 49 in the first two months of 2015. The company estimated that each right of entry visit takes four hours, with a staff cost of $200 an hour, equating to a total cost of $112,000 on the project so far (p.225, AMMA submission to the Productivity Commission, Workplace Relations Framework, Final Report).
- 2.11 Recognising a developing number of excessive number of union visits to workplaces, the previous government provided the Fair Work Commission with powers to resolve frequency of visit disputes through changes under the Fair Work Amendment Act 2013. Under the provisions, the Fair Work Commission can make any order it considers appropriate to resolve a dispute, including to suspend, revoke or impose conditions on an entry permit. However, the impact of the amendment in addressing excessive visits is minimal as the Fair Work Commission can only exercise these powers if satisfied that the frequency of visits would require an unreasonable diversion of the employer's 'critical resources'. The majority of employers in the industries most impacted by frequency problems are unlikely to meet this threshold, due to the difficulty of large organisations demonstrating a diversion of their 'critical resources'.

- 2.12 The Bill enables the Fair Work Commission to effectively deal with disputes about excessive right of entry visits. It does this by removing the 'critical resources' limitation discussed above, while retaining the orders the Fair Work Commission can make to resolve a dispute. The changes also require the Fair Work Commission to take into account the cumulative impact of entries by all union visits to a workplace. The Bill retains the requirement that the Fair Work Commission must have regard to fairness between the parties to the dispute.
- 2.13 The Productivity Commission recommended that section 505A be amended in similar terms to the Bill (Recommendation 28.1, Productivity Commission, Workplace Relations Framework, Final Report). The Productivity Commission said the proposed amendments to section 505A were 'broadly sound' and that 'an even handed threshold of what constitutes excessive use of entry rights should take into account the benefits of entries for employees and the cumulative costs imposed by strategic use of entry rights by employee representatives' (p.909, Productivity Commission, Workplace Relations Framework, Final Report). This view is consistent with the objectives of the amendments.
- 2.14 The proposed right of entry changes ensure that the Fair Work Commission can deal appropriately with excessive visits to workplaces, while balancing the right of unions to hold discussions with members or potential members.

Location of discussions

- 2.15 Amendments under the Fair Work Amendment Act 2013 introduced by the previous government have given unions the right to hold discussions with employees in the meal or break room if agreement on another room cannot be reached with the employer. Prior to 1 January 2014, an occupier was required to provide a reasonable room for a union official to use when exercising a right of entry to conduct interviews or hold discussions.
- 2.16 The amendments were granted an exemption from the requirement for a Regulation Impact Statement, with many stakeholders indicating their concern about the impact of the provisions in submissions to the House of Representatives Standing Committee on Education and Employment Inquiry into the Fair Work Amendment Bill 2013. In particular, it was argued that the change would prevent employees from enjoying their breaks without disruption, noting that the majority of Australia's workforce are not union members. These submissions are available at:
http://www.aph.gov.au/Parliamentary_Business/Committees/House_of_Representatives_Committees?url=ee/fairwork13/subs.htm)

- 2.17 The Productivity Commission supported the view, that a default location was undesirable, in its recent inquiry into the workplace relations framework. In particular it observed that the 'primary drawback of prescriptively enshrining a default location (that is, meal break rooms) in statute, as the current arrangements do, is that it will usually require sacrificing some degree of flexibility should a dispute about location arise...A recurring theme in this report has been that the FW Act should focus on the substance of a matter, rather than adherence to prescriptive requirements. The recent amendments [under the Fair Work Amendment Act 2013] appear to be contrary to this principle, and prima facie the Productivity Commission sees merit in a return to a more flexible, principles-based approach to regulating disputes about discussion locations' (p.914, Productivity Commission, Workplace Relations Framework, Final Report – text in square brackets added).

- 2.18 The Bill restores the arrangements in place prior to 1 January 2014, which provide that a permit holder must comply with any reasonable request by the occupier to hold discussions in a particular room or area of the premises. The Bill sets out a non-exhaustive list of circumstances where a request might be considered unreasonable, including if it is made with the intention of intimidating or discouraging persons from participating in discussions, or if the room is not fit for purpose. The amendments will ensure that workers who wish to speak with a union may do so in an appropriate location while allowing other workers the capacity to avoid such discussions if that is their preference.

Accommodation and transport provisions

- 2.19 The Fair Work Amendment Act 2013 introduced by the previous government included further changes to the right of entry provisions to require employers to provide transport and/or accommodation for union officials seeking right of entry to some remote sites. This requirement has been subject to significant stakeholder criticism and was not recommended by the Fair Work Act Review 2012. It was not subject to analysis via a Regulation Impact Statement.
- 2.20 In particular, during the Senate Education, Employment and Workplace Relations Legislation Committee Inquiry into the Fair Work Amendment Bill 2013, stakeholders indicated that a range of ancillary costs incurred by an employer in organising transport and accommodation for union officials would not be recoverable from unions (submissions available at: http://www.apf.gov.au/Parliamentary_Business/Committees/Senate/Education_Employment_and_Workplace_Relations/Completed_inquiries/2010-13/fairwork2013/submissions).
- 2.21 Consistent with the Policy, the Bill addresses concerns by repealing the provisions relating to transport and accommodation arrangements implemented by the Fair Work

Amendment Act 2013. The amendments will mean that employers and unions will be free to negotiate transport and accommodation arrangements as they did previously.

- 2.22 This amendment will reduce the unnecessary cost, disruption and regulation facing affected employers. In submissions to the Senate Education, Employment and Workplace Relations Legislation Committee inquiry into the Fair Work Amendment Bill 2013, stakeholders estimated that this provision could cost upwards of $40,000 for a specially scheduled flight for the union officials (pp.11-12, Australian Mines and Metals Association submission to Senate Education, Employment and Workplace Relations Legislation Committee, Inquiry into the Fair Work Amendment Bill 2013).
- 2.23 The details-stage Regulation Impact Statement found that repealing the current requirements will save businesses around $382,000 in total each year over ten years in reduced labour costs alone. Consistent with the other right of entry reforms in the Bill, these changes will further help to balance the right for employees to be represented in the workplace with the right for employers to operate without undue disruption and regulatory burden.

Part 2-3 and 2-4 – Individual flexibility arrangements

- 3.1 Under the Fair Work Act, employers and employees are able to achieve flexibility in the workplace through individual flexibility arrangements. Individual flexibility arrangements vary the effect of terms of modern awards or enterprise agreements in order to meet the genuine needs of employers and individual employees, while ensuring that the employee is better off overall than the employee would have been if no individual flexibility arrangement were agreed to.
- 3.2 Flexible work practices deliver benefits to both employees and employers. Use of individual flexibility arrangements can lead to greater job satisfaction, improve the ability for employees to manage outside-of-work responsibilities and help employers to attract and retain staff. They are also a recognised lever in reducing the gender pay gap and in supporting women back into the workforce after childbirth.

Existing framework

- 3.3 The Fair Work Act requires modern awards and enterprise agreements to include a ‘flexibility term’ that enables an employer and an individual employee to agree to an individual flexibility arrangement. An individual flexibility arrangement must, amongst other things:
- Set out the terms of the modern award or enterprise agreement that are to be varied in their effect,
 - Be genuinely agreed to by the employer and the employee,
 - Result in the employee being better off overall than if no individual flexibility arrangement were in place, and

- Be in writing and signed by both the employer and employee (as well as a parent or guardian of the employee if the employee is under 18 years of age).
- 3.4 The usual flexibility term in modern awards enables an individual flexibility arrangement made under a modern award to vary the effect of terms about arrangements for when work is performed, overtime and penalty rates, allowances and leave loadings.
- 3.5 The scope of flexibility terms in enterprise agreements is determined through the bargaining process so the matters about which an individual flexibility arrangement may be made can vary under each enterprise agreement. For instance, an enterprise agreement may stipulate that an individual flexibility arrangement can only be made about one term, for example, annual leave. If an enterprise agreement does not include a flexibility term, the model flexibility term set out in the Fair Work Regulations is taken to be a term of the agreement.
- 3.6 An individual flexibility arrangement is enforceable as a term of the modern award or enterprise agreement under which it is made.

Key measures in the Bill

- 3.7 The Bill is intended to improve the operation of individual flexibility arrangements to ensure that employers and employees have genuine access to fair flexibility in the workplace. The measures in the Bill will provide certainty to employers and employees on how the provisions about individual flexibility arrangements are to operate, while retaining all existing protections for employees.
- 3.8 The Bill implements Fair Work Review 2012 recommendations 9, 11, 12 and 24 and will:
- Confirm that non-monetary benefits can be taken into account when determining whether an employee is better off overall than the employee would have been if no individual flexibility arrangement were agreed to,
 - Provide an employer with a defence to an alleged contravention of a flexibility term where at the time the arrangement was made the employer reasonably believed that the requirements of the flexibility term were complied with, so far as the requirements are applicable to the arrangement,
 - Extend the notice period to unilaterally terminate an individual flexibility arrangement made under an enterprise agreement to 13 weeks, and
 - Require flexibility terms in enterprise agreements to include, as a minimum, that individual flexibility arrangements may deal with when work is performed, overtime rates, penalty rates, allowances and leave loading, to the extent these matters are covered in the agreement.
- 3.9 In addition to these measures, the Bill will introduce a new additional safeguard that individual flexibility arrangements include a 'genuine needs statement' setting out why the employee believes that the arrangement meets his or her genuine needs and leaves them better off overall than they would have been if no individual flexibility arrangement was in place.

- 3.10 Under the amendments, in addition to the new safeguard, all existing protections relating to an individual flexibility arrangement will be retained, including that:
- An individual flexibility arrangement cannot be made a condition of employment,
 - It must be genuinely agreed to by an individual employee, and
 - The employee must be better off overall than the employee would have been if no individual flexibility arrangement was in place.

Improving the operation of the better off overall requirement

- 3.11 The Fair Work Act currently permits non-monetary benefits to be taken into account when determining whether an employee is better off overall than the employee would be if no individual flexibility arrangement were agreed to.
- 3.12 The Bill inserts a legislative note to confirm that non-monetary benefits can be taken into account when determining whether an individual flexibility arrangement leaves an employee better off overall. The legislative note is intended to provide clarity and certainty to employers and employees.
- 3.13 The amendment maintains the intention of the current legislation when it was introduced in 2008, as detailed in the Explanatory Memorandum to the Fair Work Bill 2008. Below are illustrative examples which were included in the Explanatory Memorandum.

Danae is employed full time as a graphic designer at Pax Designs Pty Ltd. The Pax Designs Pty Ltd Enterprise Agreement 2010 enables an individual flexibility arrangement to be made between the employer and its employees in relation to the span of ordinary hours to be worked.

Danae has school aged children that she wishes to pick up from school two days per week. She negotiates an individual flexibility arrangement with her employer that she will work longer hours three days per week, so that she can leave at 3pm on the other two days to pick up her children. Danae will still work the equivalent of full time hours.

Josh works as a membership consultant at a gymnasium. Under the enterprise agreement applying to his employment, the ordinary hours of work are 37 ½ hours each week to be performed in a span between 8am and 6pm each day. Hours worked outside this span attract penalty rates. Josh's employer usually requires membership consultants to work from 9am to 5.30pm.

In his spare time, Josh coaches an under-12s footy team. To do this, he needs to be able to leave work at 4pm on Tuesdays and Thursdays each week. He wants to start work at 7.30am on these days, but usually this would attract a penalty under the terms of the agreement. The agreement allows the employer and an employee to make an individual flexibility arrangement that varies the terms of the agreement dealing with hours of work and penalty rates.

Josh approaches his employer and asks whether the employer will make an individual flexibility arrangement with him under which the employer agrees that Josh can work from 7.30am to 4pm on Tuesdays and Thursdays. Josh agrees that he will not be paid a penalty on these days, even though he starts work at 7.30am. Josh is genuinely happy to agree to this arrangement because it enables him to balance his work and personal commitments. The employer agrees to this arrangement.

The employer must ensure that Josh is better off overall under the individual flexibility arrangement than under the agreement. Often this will require the employer to make a comparison of the relevant financial benefits that the employee would receive under the agreement, and the agreement as varied by the individual flexibility arrangement. In Josh's case, however, he has agreed under the individual flexibility arrangement to give up a financial benefit (penalty rates) in return for a non- financial benefit (leaving work early). It is intended that, in appropriate circumstances, such an arrangement would pass the better off overall test. Because the better off overall test is being applied here to an individual arrangement, it is possible to take into account an employee's personal circumstances in assessing whether the employee is better off overall. Relevant factors in Josh's case that suggest the individual flexibility arrangement is likely to pass the better off overall test are:

- Josh initiated the request for the individual flexibility arrangement, suggesting that he places significant value on being able to leave work early to coach the footy team;
- Josh genuinely agreed to the arrangement;
- the period of time falling outside the span of hours is relatively insignificant. It is only one hour out of the 37 ½ hour ordinary week that Josh works.

Providing employers with a limited defence

3.14 Under the Fair Work Act, a flexibility term will be contravened if an individual flexibility arrangement does not satisfy the legislative requirements.

3.15 The Bill inserts a new provision that an employer does not contravene a flexibility term in relation to a particular individual flexibility arrangement if, at the time when the arrangement was made, the employer reasonably believed that the requirements of the flexibility term were complied with, so far as the requirements were applicable to the arrangement.

- 3.16 A genuine needs statement (detailed from paragraph 3.30 below) will be available as evidence of the employee's state of mind at the time the individual flexibility arrangement was agreed to and may be relevant to assessing the reasonableness of the employer's belief that he or she had complied with those requirements.
- 3.17 The defence will not operate in relation to deliberate contravention of the legislative requirements and all applicable remedies and penalties will still be available in these circumstances.

Extending the unilateral termination period

- 3.18 The Fair Work Act provides that a flexibility term in an enterprise agreement must state that the employer is required to ensure that any individual flexibility arrangement must be able to be terminated by either the employer or employee giving written notice of not more than 28 days, or at any time if they agree in writing to the termination.
- 3.19 The Fair Work Act Review 2012 noted that the capacity for an employee to unilaterally terminate an individual flexibility arrangement with 28 days' notice was cited by many as a key disincentive to use an individual flexibility arrangement. Workplace Express (7 October 2011) reported that the former Minister for Employment and Workplace Relations, Senator the Hon Chris Evans, told the Australian Labour and Employment Relations Association national conference that he'd had feedback that the 28 day notice period was a barrier to parties making such arrangements but that he also wanted to ensure employees weren't exposed to "capricious" changes to their conditions. The Government's amendments address these concerns.
- 3.20 The Fair Work Review 2012 recommended that the period for unilateral termination be extended to 90 days. A Full Bench of the Fair Work Commission in Modern Awards Review 2012- Award Flexibility [2013] FWCFB 2170 (15 April 2013) increased the unilateral termination period for individual flexibility arrangements made under modern awards to 13 weeks. The usual flexibility terms in modern awards were varied to give effect to this determination on 4 December 2013.
- 3.21 The Bill amends the Fair Work Act to increase the required written notice period for unilateral termination of an individual flexibility arrangement made under an enterprise agreement to 13 weeks. This will align the unilateral termination period with that currently provided for in modern awards.
- 3.22 By extending the unilateral termination period, employees will have greater confidence that their flexible working arrangements will not change suddenly. Employers will similarly have a greater period of time to make any changes that may be necessary to their operations because of a change in work arrangements.

- 3.23 The Productivity Commission recommended that 13 weeks should be the default period for unilateral termination of IFAs (Recommendation 22.1 Productivity Commission, Workplace Relations Framework, Final Report).

Improving access to the scope of terms in the model flexibility clause

- 3.24 The Fair Work Act currently allows parties to bargain over the scope of matters included in flexibility terms in enterprise agreements. This can result in flexibility terms that limit individual flexibility arrangements to only one term of an enterprise agreement.
- 3.25 The Bill amends the Fair Work Act to require the flexibility term in enterprise agreements to include, as a minimum, the matters in the model flexibility term for enterprise agreements set out in in the Fair Work Regulations. These matters are: arrangements about when work is performed, overtime rates, penalty rates, allowances and leave loading.
- 3.26 The amendments also include that in addition to the minimum matters listed above, the flexibility term may also set out any other terms of the enterprise agreement which may be varied by an individual flexibility arrangement.
- 3.27 These amendments ensure that while bargaining representatives may continue to bargain about matters to be included in an enterprise agreement flexibility term, the matters listed in the model flexibility term must be included as a minimum.
- 3.28 The Productivity Commission was supportive of this measure in its review of the workplace relations framework. It recommended that ‘the Australian Government should amend s.203 of the Fair Work Act 2009 (Cth) to require enterprise flexibility terms to permit individual flexibility arrangements to deal with all the matters listed in the model flexibility term, along with any additional matters agreed by the parties’ (Recommendation 20.3 Productivity Commission, Workplace Relations Framework, Final Report). This is consistent with the measure contained in the Bill.
- 3.29 The Productivity Commission also found that ‘if the opportunity for workplace flexibility is of genuine interest to individuals and firms, as it appears to be in many instances on occasion, it seems perverse to create the opportunity but then allow a collective negotiation process to prevent its use. Adopting the reform proposed by the 2012 Review would reduce the extent to which bargaining can restrict the scope for IFAs’ (p.688, Productivity Commission, Workplace Relations Framework, Final Report).

Genuine needs statements

- 3.30 The Bill maintains all existing protections for employees making an individual flexibility agreement and adds an additional safeguard by requiring the employer to ensure that any individual flexibility arrangement includes a 'genuine needs statement'.
- 3.31 The genuine needs statement will set out in writing why the employee believes the arrangement meets his or her genuine needs and results in them being better off overall than they would have been if no individual flexibility arrangement were agreed to. Requiring these matters to be put into writing through the statement will ensure that both the employer and individual employee consider these requirements before agreeing to an individual flexibility arrangement.
- 3.32 The genuine needs statement will be in addition to all other protections for employees in relation to individual flexibility arrangements that currently exist under the Fair Work Act.

Fair Work Act Review 2012 recommendations

Recommendation 2: Taking or accruing leave while receiving workers' compensation

- 4.1 Under section 130 of the Fair Work Act, employees are not entitled to take or accrue any leave while absent from work and in receipt of workers' compensation, unless it is permitted by the applicable Commonwealth, state or territory workers' compensation legislation. This has led to the inconsistent treatment of employee entitlements across Australia. For instance, employees in the Queensland and Commonwealth systems who are absent from work on workers' compensation can accrue annual, personal and long service leave, while employees in other jurisdictions cannot.
- 4.2 The Bill addresses existing complexity and confusion for employees and employers due to differing entitlements under workers' compensation legislation. The amendment will provide that an employee cannot take or accrue leave under the Fair Work Act during a period in which the employee is absent from work and in receipt of workers' compensation. This amendment will ensure that these employees have the same entitlements in relation to the accrual and taking of leave while absent from work and in receipt of workers' compensation regardless of the particular compensation law that applies to them.
- 4.3 The changes will not alter the capacity of an employee to take unpaid parental leave during a compensation period.

Recommendation 6: Annual leave loading on termination

- 4.4 Subsection 90(2) of the Fair Work Act requires an employee to be paid, in respect of untaken annual leave entitlements when their employment ends, at the rate the employee would have been paid had he or she taken that leave. This provision has been interpreted in some instances as requiring the payment of annual leave loading on termination of employment, even if award or agreement provisions expressly preclude the payment of the loading upon termination. This interpretation has displaced the longstanding practice in place prior to the Fair Work Act that annual leave loading is only payable at the conclusion of an employee's employment where expressly required by the employee's workplace instrument.
- 4.5 During the course of the Fair Work Act Review 2012 a number of stakeholders raised concerns that subsection 90(2) resulted in additional costs for a large number of employers, who had not traditionally been required to pay leave loading on termination. This typically amounts to a loading of 17.5 percent on top of an employee's base rate of pay, depending on the terms of the relevant award or enterprise agreement. As subsection 90(2) does not expressly clarify whether annual leave loading is payable on termination, the Fair Work Act Review 2012 noted that many employer representatives dispute the interpretation of the provision and that it has created confusion for, and disputes between, employees and employers.

- 4.6 The Bill will implement recommendation 6 of the Fair Work Act Review 2012, restoring the longstanding position that on termination of employment accrued untaken annual leave is paid at the employee's base rate of pay and leave loading is payable if it is provided for by the relevant instrument. Restoring the longstanding position would provide certainty and clarity to employers and employees and avoid disputes that have arisen as a result of differing interpretations of the provision.
- 4.7 Parties will still be free to argue both for and against the inclusion of such provisions in individual modern awards throughout the Review of Modern Awards being undertaken by the Fair Work Commission.

Recommendation 38: Transfer of business between associated entities

- 4.8 As a general rule, where an employee transfers between employers that are associated entities, this will result in a transfer of business and the employee's industrial instrument will transfer with them to the new employer with the employee. This situation applies even where the transfer was initiated by the employee themselves. Under the current transfer of business rules in the Fair Work Act, the only way to stop an instrument transferring with an employee (including in these circumstances) is to seek an order to that effect from the Fair Work Commission. The Fair Work Act Review 2012 considered that removing the need for this process in relation to voluntary transfers between associated entities would reduce unnecessary expense to employers and employees and increase mobility opportunities for employees.
- 4.9 Consistent with the Bill, the Productivity Commission recommended that when an employee, on their own initiative, seeks to transfer to a related entity of their current employer, they will be subject to the terms and conditions of employment provided by the new employer (Recommendation 26.4, Productivity Commission, Workplace Relations Framework, Final Report). The Productivity Commission also indicated support for the description provided in the explanatory memorandum to the Fair Work Amendment Bill 2014, and replicated in the explanatory memorandum of this Bill, regarding the meaning of 'on their own initiative' (p.842-843, Productivity Commission, Workplace Relations Framework, Final Report).
- 4.10 The Bill seeks to amend section 311 to provide that when an employee transfers to an associated entity of their current employer on their own initiative, their industrial instrument will not transfer with them and they will be subject to the terms and conditions of their new employer. The changes only impact transfers at an employee's own initiative. Additional transfer of business provisions were introduced in December 2012 to cover transfers of business between state public sector employers and national system employers. The Bill amends those provisions in a similar way to the amendments to section 311. Below is an illustrative example of an employee voluntarily transferring under the proposed amendments.

Anne is employed full time as an engineer with Mega Engines Pty Ltd (Mega). Her employment with Mega is covered by the Mega Engines Pty Ltd Enterprise Agreement 2011-2014 (Mega Agreement). Super Engines Pty Ltd (Super) and Mega are part of the same corporate group. The companies are associated entities.

Super conducts a recruitment and selection process for a senior engineer position. Super's relevant industrial instrument is the Super Engines Pty Ltd Enterprise Agreement 2012-2015. Anne voluntarily applies for the position with Super in order to progress her career as a senior engineer and to work on a larger range of projects in a bigger team. She is offered and accepts the position.

Under the current transfer of business rules, Super, Anne, or a relevant union would be required to apply to the Fair Work Commission for an order that the Mega Agreement not transfer with Anne and apply to her work with Super. However, under the proposed amendments this process will no longer be necessary as the Mega Agreement will not transfer with Anne and she will automatically be subject to Super's terms and conditions of employment as she has decided to move across at her own initiative.

- 4.11 The details-stage Regulation Impact Statement calculated that this amendment to the transfer of business provisions will reduce costs for employers by $95,112 per annum. Costs cover administration and labour costs associated with making an application to the Fair Work Commission. They also include the expense involved in maintaining two different payroll systems if the employer does not seek an order from the Fair Work Commission or if the Fair Work Commission declines to make an order to stop the instrument transferring.

Recommendation 43: Fair Work Commission unfair dismissal hearings and conferences

- 4.12 The Fair Work Commission currently has the power to dismiss unfair dismissal applications 'on the papers' in certain circumstances, that is, without a hearing. This covers situations where an application is vexatious or unmeritorious, an applicant fails to attend a conference or hearing or fails to comply with a Fair Work Commission order or direction. However, the Commission's power to do so is limited in cases where a matter involves disputed facts. The Fair Work Act Review 2012 found that this limitation has the effect of causing reluctance among Fair Work Commission members to dismiss unfair dismissal matters 'on the papers'.
- 4.13 The Productivity Commission recommended giving the Fair Work Commission clearer powers, in limited circumstances, to deal with unfair dismissal applications before conducting a conference or hearing, and based on forms provided by applicants and respondents (that is, 'on the papers') (Recommendation 17.2, Productivity Commission, Workplace Relations Framework, Final Report). The Productivity Commission also noted that 'consideration of dismissal applications 'on the papers' is already being canvassed via legislative amendments, and some of the inherent risks in such proposals could be managed via a process of assistance for applicants. Subject to this occurring, procedural changes of this type, married with changes to conciliation discussed in chapter 3, may serve to reduce the number of unmeritorious unfair dismissal cases considered by the FWC, and to reduce claims of 'rough justice' resulting from conciliation processes' (p.594, Productivity Commission, Workplace Relations Framework, Final Report).

- 4.14 The Bill addresses this issue by establishing a 'designated application-dismissal power', which encompasses the powers of the Fair Work Commission to dismiss applications under sections 399A and 587 of the Fair Work Act. The Bill clarifies that the requirement under section 397 to hold a hearing for matters involving disputed facts does not apply when the Fair Work Commission is exercising the designated application-dismissal power.
- 4.15 The Bill includes procedural safeguards to provide transparency and ensure that both sides are afforded procedural fairness in such circumstances. In particular, the Bill includes the requirement that the Fair Work Commission must invite parties by written notice to provide further information relating to whether this power should be exercised and take this into account before making a decision to dismiss an application without a hearing or conference. Having considered this additional information, the Fair Work Commission may decide to conduct a conference or hearing, for the purposes of deciding whether to exercise a designated application-dismissal power, if it considers it necessary.
