

As a teacher I have concerns that the NAPLAN results are not a true reflection of many children's abilities and therefore the results should not be used as anything more than a diagnostic tool for teachers. To rate a school on how their students performed on one day of the year is not a valid assessment of the overall school, teaching staff and students. It will lead to schools, staff and students being labelled negatively. I believe that this is a blatant misuse of data and I am against the publishing of this information.
