

The Visa Capping bill involves certain amount of overseas who have made sorts of contribution for Australia. As one of them, I am having my favourite job here as a hairdresser. I really love it and I love the lifestyles here as well. I really hope I can settle myself down in Australia.

In the opposite way, we can understand that the government has its own difficulties to grant all the applications. However, I think the departments should have few solutions to grab the good immigrant. The quality is more important than quantity.

In my opinion, the people who have spent a certain time and money to study/learn techniques in Australia, meanwhile, they achieved the standards of immigrant, and then at this moment, they are continuing contribute to Australia with the techniques they have got, they are good for Australia. They deserve to stay.

And whatever is it, the visa application be refused, the reason has to be reasonable and fair. The visa capping law would not convince people in anyway.
