

The Government must be more honest and transparent in its reporting of greenhouse emissions. As Christina Figueras, head of 2015 UN climate change Paris agreement says, carbon emissions from Australia's use and export of fossil fuels account for about 5 per cent of global fossil fuel footprint and with exports included, Australians have the biggest per capita carbon footprint in the world, much more than their claimed 1.3 per cent of the carbon problem.