It is high time that the rest of Australia caught up with the cleanest state in this beautiful land
- South Australia.

The Kesab campaign was a very progressive initiative when I was growing up in SA. The refundable deposits on drink containers soon followed. Children grow up knowing that they need to keep their environs clean and beautiful and they can earn some pocket money in the process by collecting bottles and cans. Why does the rest of Australia lack the political will to follow such a successful initiative? You can't force people to be clean but you can make them pay.
