

I demand that the Australian government ratifies the Paris agreement without review.

Review is parliamentary speak for watering down the emissions targets.

Australia's targets are already laughably low, indeed non-existent really, as the ilk of Greg Hunt regularly lie to the Australian people and claim Australia is doing well on reducing emissions.

However this is entirely not the case, as Australia's emissions are rising and showing the government laughably misnamed 'direct action' scheme is allowing Australia's top polluters to release more rather than less, pollution.

Australian emissions rising towards historical highs and will not peak before 2030, analysis finds

Tom Arup

SHARE

TWEET

MORE

- 'Blue carbon' of sea undervalued

Australia's national greenhouse gas emissions are set to keep rising well beyond 2020 on current trends, with the projected growth rate one of the worst in the developed world, a new analysis has found.

Advertisement

HUFFPOST AUSTRALIA

Elon Musk Has Finally Unveiled His ...

E-Learning Makes Sense For
Time-Poor ...

Australia needs to do this:

1. Ratify Paris.
2. Bring in a carbon tax, which the Australian people want. And
3. Bring in a punishment regime for Direct Action to force polluters to reduce emissions.