

The current changes of GMS really bring a lot of instability to the migration field. The visa capping bill cannot solve the problem. Using this bill to cap and cease the applications made before the bill is completely not the spirit of law. It also damages Australia's reputation.

Australian government is a responsible government. That is why so many people from all over the world come here, studying here and living here. A government can change its policy but a responsible government must be responsible for the policy it made.

It cannot be accepted that onshore overseas students' applications are capped and ceased. They made their valid applications under Australian government's policy and have already been waiting for the decision for a long time and they have already had their live here.

To cap and cease visas may be a solution for the current time, but to build Australia's reputation is for the country's future.
