  > JOINT STANDING COMMITTEE ON ELECTORAL MATTERS
  > The last election required that people voted using a compulsory > preferential system, this is unfair and panders to the two major > parties. If I cannot choose which of the two large parties I > want less, my vote will, in many cases, run through > the preferences until I have chosen one of them.
 > The concept of equality is ignored, I hate them both > equally, therefore they are equal last on my list, > if > I number them both 6, then my vote will not count at > all, even though desire to vote for my first > preference is very obvious.
 ~
 > I think that the system is completely without merit, > and I find it totally immoral for a government to expect me to be a taxpayer without being allowed to participate in the

 > The letters I received back from the AUSTRALIAN > ELECTORAL COMMISSION'S > HELLEN MONTEN said that the system was that > sometimes you have to vote for someone you don't want to vote > for and if you don't you will be fined.
> That is not good enough, if it is the case you can > take me off the roll.
> The other point is the value of preferences, a > second > preference should be worth no more than half.
