

Dear Sir / Madam,

I have emigrated from Finland 30 year ago and taken Australian lifestyle as a best way to live among other australians (I have australian citizenship).

I am not denying my finnish backrolound, but I am not trying to convert australians to finns. If finnish culture, habits, belief system would be so important to me that I could not live without of them, then it is better I move back where I came from.

And that applies anyone and any culture (I am not talking about races, skincolor or any fysical differences) who does not respect the culture and habits and law, which are used in particular country, where they are dwelling.

Currently I see islam spreading in western countries and as it is intolerant against other cultures (and even other muslims) and I am very worried as it causes violence against them who do not submit to islam.

We can see it in Britain, France, Nederland, Sweden, etc. and in islamic countries clearly.

Regards,

Qld. 4123

1 April 2011