

Maria Vamvakinou

Chair of The Federal Parliament's Migration Committee

Dear Maria,

I make the following submission. I believe that migrants want to come to Australia because of our democratic and free country. This country is the great country it is today because of its Christian heritage which is deeply ingrained within its culture. It is unacceptable that people should migrate here and then proceed to try and change our heritage and traditions. At times Australians feel that although they are the tax payers and workers, they are given the least say by their governments who seem to try to please migrants ahead of Australians. If people wish to migrate to Australia they can, but they must (without exception) be willing to embrace the culture and Christian heritage that made it great in the first place.

Yours sincerely and with great concern,
