

Submission No 25

Inquiry into potential reforms of National Security Legislation

Name: Eamonn Collins

Organisation: Private Capacity

From: Eamonn Collins
Sent: Friday, 20 July 2012 5:28 PM
To: Committee, PJCIS (REPS)
Subject: The National Security Inquiry

Hello

I just want to say that the latest plans to pick through web and phone history as well as monitor Facebook and twitter is an absolute joke. The government here set's a million illogical and unreasonable laws that are all based on some baseless idea of morality. (Yes that's right I'm saying it, morality isn't real!) The response to all government intervention and force in the past has been the complete opposite of what's been desired.

- Prohibition led to an absolutely gigantic underground drug market which has no trouble reaching our children. (Or actually using our children to make it operate.)
- Speeding cameras and booze buses have led to a culture that glorifies big V8's and hooning. (Not to mention drinking.)
- The tax system has led to a massive amount of fraud. (EVERYONE lies on there tax return.)
- Work place regulations have led to violent workplaces where employers cover up policy (eg. safety procedures) from employees to make there own jobs easier.

Every single law you set does nothing but aggravate people and make them do the exact opposite of what you want. If you keep pushing in this direction where YOU know what's right and everybody else needs to bend over and play by your rules, you will only incite a million more instances of rebellion amongst your people.

Stop trying to regulate things that don't want to be regulated (People). Only retarded "do-gooders" want to play by every rule. Everyone else is happy breaking them!

I will personally see to it that if this legislation is passed. All my naughty criminal friends will have new safer and more covert ways of breaking your rules using the internet.

Yours sincerely

Eamonn Collins

(If it's not clear I'm saying NO to the national security enquiry!!)