Recommendations

Recommendation 1

2.119 The committee recommends that practices and procedures be put in place to ensure that all parties to Parenting Management Hearings are made fully aware of the legal ramifications of engaging in the process.

Recommendation 2

2.120 The committee recommends that should one party be granted leave for legal representation, the other party should also be granted leave.

Recommendation 3

2.121 The committee recommends that the government consider giving the Panel authority to determine relocation matters where the distance of the relocation is less than 100 kilometres.

Recommendation 4

2.122 The committee recommends that amendments be made to either the bill, or to the relevant regulations, to ensure that Panel determinations come into effect on the day they are made, unless another date is specified by the Panel.

Recommendation 5

2.123 The committee recommends that appropriate guidelines be developed to govern the use and storage of sensitive records and evidence by a Parenting Management Panel.

Recommendation 6

2.124 The committee recommends that the government publicly release the evaluation of the Parenting Management Hearing pilot program.

Recommendation 7

2.125 On the basis that the government will seriously consider and, where appropriate, action the recommendations made, the committee recommends that the bill be passed.

Chapter 1

Introduction and background

1.1 On 7 December 2017 the Senate referred the Family Law Amendment (Parenting Management Hearings) Bill 2017 (the bill) to the Legal and Constitutional Legislation Committee (the committee) for inquiry and report by 26 March 2018.

1.2 The Senate Selection of Bills Committee recommended that the bill be referred for inquiry for a number of reasons, including to:

- provide Senators with an opportunity to consider what, in the family law setting, is an innovative proposal tailored to the particular needs of self-represented litigants;
- address issues of concern to relevant stakeholders [that] require opportunity for feedback;
- consider expert views on impacts and possible improvements;
- address concerns about the bill dramatically affecting the manner in which proceedings are conducted; and
- assess potential impacts on families experiencing family violence.<sup>1</sup>

Background and purpose of the bill

1.3 On 6 December 2017, the Assistant Minister to the Prime Minister, Senator the Hon James McGrath introduced the bill into the Senate. In his second reading speech he outlined the nature and purpose of a new pilot program to resolve family law disputes, the Parenting Management Hearing Panel (PMH, or Panel). This bill, he stated, would create:

...a new statutory authority designed to offer self-represented litigants a more flexible and inquisitorial alternative to the court process. During the pilot phase, there will be no costs charged to families who choose to participate.

... A key objective of the Panel is to give to parents who would otherwise be in a court without legal representation the option to obtain a binding decision about parenting arrangements in a quick, fair, just, informal and economical way, all the time ensuring that decisions are made in the best interests of children and that safety is prioritised.<sup>2</sup>

1 Senate Standing Committee for the Selection of Bills, Report No. 15 of 2017, 7 December 2017, Appendix 8.

2 Senator the Hon James McGrath, Assistant Minister to the Prime Minister, Senate Hansard, 6 December 2017, p. 9913.

1.4 The Explanatory Memorandum notes the initiative's inclusion in the 2017–18 Commonwealth Budget, as well as the intent of the PMH, which is:

...aimed at transforming the family law system to support families to resolve their family law disputes as quickly as possible, while adequately managing risks.

1.5 The Explanatory Memorandum provides an outline of the general nature, purpose and function of the PMH:

The Panel would be an independent statutory authority that would conduct hearings and make binding administrative determinations in respect of parenting arrangements for children—similar to 'parenting orders' made by a court under the Family Law Act 1975 (the Act). The parenting management hearings model would encourage and support families to resolve their parenting disputes in a prompt and informal way, through a more user-friendly and less-adversarial forum than the traditional court system.

Parenting management hearings will be a consent-based forum, and parties cannot be compelled to participate. Families will still be required to try to resolve their disputes themselves, where possible and appropriate, through family dispute resolution services.<sup>3</sup>

1.6 The Explanatory Memorandum suggests that this initiative would benefit not only separating couples who choose to resolve their disputes through the PMH, but also their children:

Research has consistently shown that reduced parental conflict after separation and the timely resolution of parenting disputes is beneficial for children and families. Unlike the traditional adversarial system, where two opposing sides present their case, those managing the hearings will undertake inquiries and gather information to promote informed and safe outcomes for families.<sup>4</sup>

1.7 The Attorney-General's Department (AGD or department) noted that the PMH pilot would complement the ongoing review of the entire family law system being undertaken by the Australian Law Reform Commission (ALRC), which was commissioned by the government in September 2017 and due to report in March 2019.<sup>5</sup>

Key provisions and principles

1.8 The bill would establish the PMH as a pilot program, initially in the Sydney suburb of Parramatta, with second location to be announced in late 2018.<sup>6</sup>

5 Submission 26, p. 2. This review is discussed at greater length in chapter 2 of this report.

1.9 The Explanatory Memorandum states that the PMH would be underpinned by two key principles, which are set out in the bill as Objects:

The first principle is that the hearings will be fair, just, economical, informal and prompt. The second principle is that the best interests of the child will be the paramount consideration. This second principle is consistent with the key objective underpinning existing Part VII (Children) of the Act.<sup>7</sup>

1.10 Additionally, the Explanatory Memorandum states the PMH would have the capacity to recognise and address family violence, as it is a common factor of family law cases. It outlines a number of ways that the Principal and other Members of the PMH would be able to recognise and consider such cases appropriately:

Recognising that family violence is a common experience among separated parents, with a majority of parents reporting either emotional or, to a lesser extent, physical abuse, it is critical that any forum established to resolve parenting disputes is equipped to identify and respond safely and effectively to family violence.

The Principal Member appointed to lead the Panel would be required to have specialist knowledge of, and experience in, dealing with matters relating to family violence. Further, the Bill would ensure that in each case that comes before it, the Panel will give careful consideration to the family's individual circumstances, and will make an assessment about the capacity of the Panel to manage any safety risks for the family through the forum. The Panel will not be empowered to deal with applications involving allegations of child sexual abuse.

Under a more inquisitorial model, Panel members would have greater control over hearings, directing lines of enquiry and the focus of the hearing; questions will be asked by Panel members, avoiding the potential for cross-examination of a victim by a perpetrator of family violence.<sup>8</sup>

1.11 The proposal also provides for participants in hearings to be supported by other services, such as counselling and family violence services, to 'minimise the intensity and duration of conflict', including for children.<sup>9</sup>

1.12 The Explanatory Memorandum also outlines the key features of the bill as follows:

- to provide a forum for resolving less-complex family law disputes between self-represented parties;
- to resolve matters in a fair, just, economical, informal, less-adversarial and prompt way;
- to ensure the best interests of the child is the paramount consideration;

9 Explanatory Memorandum, p. 2

- to ensure parties are assisted by support services, integrated with the Panel, where appropriate, and
- to ensure that the outcomes of the parenting management hearings will be binding on parties and enforceable by a court.<sup>10</sup>

1.13 The bill would make consequential amendments to a number of other acts:

- A New Tax System (Family Assistance) Act 1999;
- Australian Citizenship Act 2007;
- Australian Passports Act 2005;
- Federal Court of Australia Act 1976;
- Migration Act 1958;
- My Health Records Act 2012;
- National Disability Insurance Scheme Act 2013;
- Social Security Act 1991; and
- Social Security (Administration) Act 1999.<sup>11</sup>

1.14 The Explanatory Memorandum is clear that the PMH has not been designed to replace the Family Court system, but simply to:

...provide access to a different type of forum for parents in conflict and encourage a cultural shift away from the courts as the default arbiter of last resort. While the pilot may help to ease the caseload of the courts, it is not intended to replace the courts or other important services that help parents to resolve their disputes.<sup>12</sup>

Provisions in greater detail

Parenting Management Hearings Panel

1.15 The bill would establish the PMH Panel as a statutory authority under proposed section 11T. According to the Explanatory Memorandum, it would be able to:

receive and consider applications for parenting determinations (see new Subdivision A of Division 2 of Part IIIAA); conduct pre-hearing conferences in relation to applications for parenting determinations (see new section 11KD of Part IIIAA);

conduct parenting management hearings to consider such applications (see new Subdivision B of Division 2 of Part IIIAA), and 11 Explanatory Memorandum, pp. 2–3.

make parenting determinations (under new section 11P).<sup>13</sup>

1.16 Under new section 11JG, the panel would be able to make decisions (including the discharging, varying, suspending, or reviving of a determination by the panel) on the following types of matters:

- (a) the person or persons with whom a child is to live;
- (b) the time a child is to spend with another person or other persons;
- (c) the allocation of parental responsibility for a child;
- (d) if 2 or more persons are to share parental responsibility for a child—the form of consultations those persons are to have with one another about decisions to be made in the exercise of that responsibility;
- (e) the communication a child is to have with another person or other persons; and
- (f) any aspect of the care, welfare or development of the child or any other aspect of parental responsibility for a child.<sup>14</sup>

1.17 New subsection 11JG(3) of the bill prevents the panel from making parenting determinations in relation to the provision of medical procedures for a child or in relation to the parentage of a child.

1.18 The procedure for the conduct of parenting management hearings provides that:

- (a) the procedure of the Panel is within the discretion of the Panel; and
- (b) the Panel is not bound by the rules of evidence; and the Panel may inform itself in any way it thinks fit; and
- (c) the hearing is to be conducted with as little technicality and formality, and as quickly and economically, as the requirements of this Part and a proper consideration of the matters before the Panel permit; and
- (d) the Panel may give directions in relation to the conduct of the hearing.<sup>15</sup>

1.19 A party to a PMH may appeal a decision or determination of a Panel, only on a question of law, to the Federal Circuit Court (proposed section 11Q). The Explanatory Memorandum clearly states that appeals can only be made on a question of law, rather than merits:

Merits review will not be available. This is intended to ensure there is an appropriate level of finality following a parenting determination to promote stability for children affected by a determination. This takes into account the required consensual nature of the forum and the objective of the forum to be a quicker and more informal way of obtaining a binding decision in respect of a parenting dispute. The Bill also provides that a parenting determination may be reconsidered by the Panel or a court, should there be a significant change in circumstances in relation to the child who is the subject of the parenting determination.<sup>16</sup>

14 Proposed subsection 11JG.

15 Proposed section 11LD.

Composition of the panel

1.20 Each PMH must be heard by a Panel made up of a Principal Member and other Panel members, who are appointed by the Governor-General (proposed sections 11U and 11UA(1)).

1.21 To be eligible for appointment as a Principal Member, the person must have been enrolled as a legal practitioner for at least five years and have extensive knowledge and skills including in the matters of family law and family violence (proposed subsection 11UA(2)).

1.22 A qualified legal practitioner may also be a Panel member provided they have been enrolled as a legal practitioner for at least five years and have knowledge of and experience in matters of family law (proposed subsection 11UA(3)).

1.23 Other Panel members, without a legal qualification, are required to have at least five years' experience working with families or children, as well as having specialist knowledge in one or more of the following areas: psychology; counselling; social work; family dispute resolution; community work; family violence; mental health; drug or alcohol addiction; child development; or any other field relevant to the duties of a Panel member (proposed subsection 11UA(4)).

1.24 Each Panel must consist of at least one legally qualified panel member (Including the Principal Member) and at least one non-legally qualified panel member (proposed subsection 11VB(1)).

1.25 On the qualifications and constitution of the panel, the AGD submitted:

The multi-disciplinary nature of the appointment requirements reflects that many families presenting to the family law system have multiple needs. Recent research by the Australian Institute of Family Studies has found that for families using the courts to resolve their family law disputes, 38.1% presented with four or more risk-related or complex issues (for example, family violence, safety concerns, substance misuse, problematic social media or pornography use, gambling). Families using the courts presented with an average number of three risk-related or complex issues.

Given the complex profile of families using the court system, in order to assess whether a matter is appropriate for a PMH, the Panel must be skilled enough to identify those complexities. While it is intended that the Panel deal with less complex family law parenting disputes, this does not equate to cases absent all complexity...

The qualification requirements set out in the Bill reflect the importance of having highly-skilled experts in a range of disciplines on the Panel, who will be well placed to identify risks and conduct proceedings in a way that is appropriate to the circumstances of each individual matter.<sup>17</sup>

Parties to a parenting determination

1.26 The bill provides that the following people would be able to apply to the Panel for a parenting determination: a parent of a child; a child; a grandparent of a child; or a person concerned with the 'care, welfare, or development of the child' (proposed section 11K).

1.27 A parenting management hearing can only be conducted with the consent of each person with parental responsibility of the child (proposed section 11KC). Where consent has not been provided, the Panel would dismiss the application (proposed subsection 11NA(1)).

1.28 Where the parties have consented to a determination without appearing before the Panel, and if it appears to the Panel that the matter can be adequately determined without the parties appearing before the Panel, the Panel may make a parenting determination on the papers (proposed section 11LC).

1.29 In limited circumstances a person can seek leave of the Panel for legal representation when appearing before the Panel (proposed section 11LJ). This includes where there are reasonable grounds to believe that there has been family violence, or a risk of family violence to a party and the capacity of a party to effectively participate in the hearing without legal representation.

1.30 Where it appears to the Panel that a child's interest should be independently represented by a lawyer, the Panel may direct that child's interest to be represented by a lawyer (proposed section 11LK). The role of the independent lawyer is to act impartially to the parties of the parenting management hearing and to ensure that the views of the child are put before the Panel (proposed subsection 11LL(5)).

Jurisdiction of the Panel

1.31 The bill lists the circumstances in which the Panel must dismiss an application for a parenting determination (proposed section 11NA), including: where an application is for the relocation of the child (proposed subsection 11NA(2)); when the application alleges child sexual abuse or risk of child sexual abuse (proposed subsection 11NA(3)); or when relevant court proceedings are instituted (proposed subsection 11NA(7)).

1.32 Additionally, the Panel has the flexibility and discretion to dismiss an application for a parenting determination 'if the Panel is satisfied that it is appropriate in all the circumstances to do so' (proposed subsection 11NB). This decision may be based on:

- (a) the complexity of the matters for consideration by the Panel;
- (b) the capacity of the Panel to manage any risks relating to the safety of the parties or the child;

(c) the capacity of the Panel to determine the matters for consideration in a manner consistent with the objective of the Panel referred to in subsection 11TA(1);

(d) the capacity of a party to effectively participate in the parenting management hearing, having regard to any power imbalances between the parties or any other relevant factor;

(e) if a family violence order applies, or has applied, to the child or a member of the child's family—any relevant inferences that can be drawn from the order;

(f) any other matter that the Panel considers relevant.<sup>18</sup>

1.33 Where the Panel suspects there has been abuse of, or risk of abuse of the child, or family violence or a risk of family violence by of the parties, the Panel must consider whether to dismiss an application for parenting determination (proposed subsection 11NB(3)).

1.34 Additionally, the Panel may dismiss an application for a parenting determination in the following circumstances:

- if consent of a party to the application was obtained by fraud, threat, duress or coercion (proposed section 11NC);
- if the Panel is satisfied that the application was frivolous, vexatious, or an abuse of the process of the panel (proposed section 11ND);
- if there has been a failure by a party to proceed with the application (proposed section 11NE); and
- where there has been a written request by a party that the application be dismissed, and where the Panel is satisfied that this is appropriate (proposed section 11NF).

1.35 At any stage of a parenting management hearing, the Panel may direct the parties to the hearing to attend counselling, attend family dispute resolution, or that one or more parties attend an appropriate course, program or other service (proposed section 11MC).

Consideration of the best interest of the child

1.36 Part VII of the Family Law Act 1975 (the Act), outlines the framework that courts must apply when considering the best interest of the child. The Parenting Management Explanatory Memorandum notes that the bill is consistent with current family law provisions, as this part of the Act would continue to apply to PMH processes.<sup>19</sup> The bill states that PMH considerations in relation to the best interests of the child include:

18 Proposed subsection 11NB(2).

19 Noting, in particular, its consistency with 60B of the Family Law Act. Explanatory Memorandum, p. 37.

- that the Panel have regard to the kinship obligations and practices of the child's Aboriginal or Torres Strait Islander culture (proposed section 11JA);
  - as a primary consideration the panel should have regard to the benefit of the child in having a meaningful relationship with both parents, and 'the need to protect the child from physical or psychological harm', however, that greater weight should be given to the latter (proposed section 11JB); and
  - other considerations listed at proposed subsection 11JB(4), including the views expressed by the child, and the nature of the relationship of the child with each of the parents.

Panel rules and directions

1.37 The minister may, by legislative instrument, make rules relating to receiving referrals of matters, the transfer of a matter to a relevant court, or the allowances or fees to be paid by the Commonwealth or other persons to witnesses appearing at a parenting management hearing (proposed subsection 11SB(2)). However, the minister cannot make rules that:

- (a) create an offence or civil penalty;
- (b) provide powers of:
  - (i) arrest or detention; or
  - (ii) entry, search or seizure;
- (c) impose a tax;
- (d) set an amount to be appropriated from the Consolidated 16 Revenue Fund under an appropriation in this Act;
- (e) directly amend the text of this Act.<sup>20</sup>

1.38 The Principal Member is responsible 'for ensuring the effective, orderly and expeditious discharge of the business of the Panel' (proposed section 11V). The Principal Member may give directions 'in relation to the practice and procedure of the Panel, and the conduct of parenting management hearings' (proposed subsection 11VA(1)). The Principal Member directions may deal with the following matters:

- (a) the requirements for making applications to the Panel;
- (b) the form and manner in which, and the time within which documents may or must be given to the Panel;
- (c) arrangements for assessing the suitability of, and risks associated with, applications for parenting determinations;
- (d) procedures for amending applications for parenting determinations;
- (e) matters relating to pre-hearing conferences;
- (f) management hearings;
- (g) the arrangement of the business of the Panel;

20 Proposed subsection 11SB(3).

- (h) the Panel members who are to conduct parenting management hearings;
- (i) the places at which the Panel may sit.<sup>21</sup>

1.39 The Principal Member is also able to make decisions in cases where the panel is unable to make a majority decision. The department stated:

The bill provides that, in the case of the two-person composed panel, the presiding member's decision would prevail. In the case of three, where there might be a majority and someone in the minority, the majority decision would prevail.<sup>22</sup>

Compatibility with human rights

1.40 According to the Explanatory Memorandum, the bill is compatible with the human rights and freedoms recognised or declared in the international instruments listed in section 3 of the Human Rights (Parliamentary Scrutiny) Act 2011.<sup>23</sup>

1.41 The Explanatory Memorandum does note that a number of human rights issues are engaged by the bill over several international agreements to which Australia is a party. However, the Explanatory Memorandum concludes:

The Bill is compatible with human rights because it promotes the protection of human rights, particularly the best interests of the child in the CRC. To the extent that it may limit human rights, those limitations are reasonable, necessary and proportionate to achieve the legitimate aims of the Bill and the Act.<sup>24</sup>

Comment made by the Senate Scrutiny of Bills Committee

1.42 The Senate Scrutiny of Bills committee asked for the Attorney-General to provide more information on the bill's inclusion of no-invalidity clauses and reversal of the evidential burden of proof in some cases. More specifically, the committee sought the Attorney-General's:

- [d]etailed justification for including no-invalidity clauses in proposed subsections 11LG(8), 11PB(8) and 11PC(7) of the bill, which mean that a failure to inform the Panel of relevant matters, or a failure by the Panel to provide reasons for, or explain the consequences of, making a parenting determination, will not invalidate a parenting determination<sup>25</sup>; and

1.43 The Scrutiny Committee reported on these matters on 21 March 2018.<sup>27</sup>

Financial implications

1.44 The Explanatory Memorandum states that the 2017–18 Budget allocated $12.7 million over four years to implement this measure for trials of the PMH at two locations, one in Parramatta and the other yet to be determined.<sup>28</sup>

Conduct of the inquiry

1.45 This bill was referred to the committee for inquiry at the same time as the Family Law Amendment (Family Violence and Other Measures) Bill 2017 (Family Violence bill). The committee is due to table its report into that bill on 20 April 2018.

1.46 Although these bills would both make amendments to Australia's family law framework, the committee undertook separate inquiries to give each bill due consideration, and is reporting on the bills separately. That said, it should be noted that several submitters made a single submission to both inquiries, with the committee's approval. The committee also undertook two hearings in Sydney and Melbourne, at which some witnesses gave evidence on both bills.

Submissions and public hearings

1.47 Details of the inquiry were advertised on the committee's website, including a call for submissions to be received by 7 February 2018. The committee also wrote directly to a number of relevant individuals and organisations inviting them to make submissions.

1.48 The committee received 32 submissions, which are listed at appendix 1 of this report. All submissions are available in full on the committee's website, except two submissions accepted in confidence.

1.49 The committee held two public hearings on 21 February 2018 in Sydney and on 22 February 2018 in Melbourne.

Structure of this report

1.50 This report consists of two chapters:

- This chapter sets out a brief background and overview of the bill's intent and provisions, as well as the administrative details of the inquiry.

- Chapter 2 outlines the provisions of the bill in more detail, discusses matters raised by submitters and witnesses about the proposed amendments, and outlines the committee's views.

Acknowledgements

1.51 The committee thanks all organisations and individuals that made submissions to this inquiry, as well as those that gave further evidence at public hearings.

Chapter 2

Issues and concerns raised

2.1 This chapter outlines the key issues raised in submissions received by the inquiry and by witnesses giving evidence at hearings, and also sets out the committee's views and recommendations.

Support for the bill

2.2 Many submissions were favourable about the proposed PMH process, particularly in its efforts to move resolution of parenting issues to an inquisitorial—rather than adversarial—format. For example, Relationships Australia Victoria (RAV) submitted:

RAV believes that the Parenting Management Hearings Panel, staffed by members with expertise in family law and co-occurring complex issues, is a constructive and viable option for less adversarial resolution of disputes relating to children. In particular, the alignment with the existing principles and Best Interests of Children contained in the Family Law Act 1975, and the safety provisions detailed in the Bill, could provide vulnerable parents and children with determinations to support safety and well-being.<sup>1</sup>

2.3 The Eastern Domestic Violence Service (EDVOS) also noted the benefits of such a shift:

Essentially the adversarial system has not worked. Pitting one parent against the other leads to greater conflict between parents, creating a negative and irreparable impact on their parenting relationship and causes harm to their children. Moreover, we find that the adversarial system is embraced by people with high conflict behaviours, in particular coercively controlling fathers who thrive in it.<sup>2</sup>

2.4 Some evidence noted potentially positive effects of the PMH on the court system more generally. For example, Ms Kylie Beckhouse, the Director of Family Law, Legal Aid New South Wales (LA NSW), suggested that:

Our lawyers are well aware of the strains facing the family law system and the delays being experienced by those seeking a court adjudication. The impact of these delays on children we represent cannot be underestimated. We therefore welcome any measure that will lead to a speedier, more cost effective and safe resolution of family law disputes. We sincerely hope that some of the cohort of families who are currently stuck in the family law court system will be eligible for parenting management hearing processes so that some pressure is taken off the existing system.<sup>3</sup>

1 Submission 6, p. 3.

2 Submission 11, p. 2.

3 Proof Committee Hansard, 22 February 2018, p. 17.

2.5 The AGD cited a number of parliamentary reviews and other expert opinions that supported the Commonwealth working towards a tribunal-based system, including for cases involving family violence.<sup>4</sup>

2.6 Others endorsed the expertise and experience of the Principal and other Members of Panels stipulated in the bill, to bring a range of perspectives to the decision-making of panels.<sup>5</sup> For example, RAV submitted that the Panel:

...staffed by members with expertise in family law and co-occurring complex issues, is a constructive and viable option for less adversarial resolution of disputes relating to children. In particular, the alignment with the existing principles and Best Interests of Children contained in the Family Law Act 1975, and the safety provisions detailed in the Bill, could provide vulnerable parents and children with determinations to support safety and well-being.<sup>6</sup>

2.7 The Commissioners for Children and Young People from Western Australia and South Australia particularly noted support for the child's right to be heard in the PMH process contained in the bill.<sup>7</sup>

2.8 The committee noted that the overwhelming majority of evidence received for this inquiry supported broad reform of the family law system and consideration of alternatives to the existing court processes. Some submitters and witnesses supported a move to a less adversarial, consent-based model of dispute resolution, even if they did not support the bill currently being considered.<sup>8</sup>

Concerns raised

2.9 A number of concerns were raised by witnesses and submitters that will be discussed in turn.

Timing of the pilot program

2.10 On 27 September 2017 the former Attorney-General, Senator the Hon George Brandis QC, commissioned the Australian Law Reform Commission (ALRC) to undertake a comprehensive review of the family law system and report by 31 March 2019.<sup>9</sup> Some evidence received by the committee argued in favour of this review running its course before the commencement of the pilot programs looking to improve parts of the family law system.<sup>10</sup> For example, the Australian Human Rights Commission (AHRC) argued:

While there have been a number of inquiries into family violence and family law over the past decade, the Commission considers that the ALRC review provides a unique opportunity to address a broad range of concerns about the implementation of children's rights across the whole family law system...The operation of the Parent Management Hearings may raise complex issues that will benefit from a consideration by the ALRC in its review of the family law system.<sup>11</sup>

2.11 Similarly, the Family Law Section (FLS) of Law Council of Australia (Law Council) suggested that the PMH initiative represented a 'radical departure' from the existing family law system, and so argued:

The FLS finds it difficult to understand why the Government might choose to embark now, with limited review or research about changes of this magnitude, when the ALRC has been tasked with undertaking a 'broad and far reaching' review focusing on 'key areas of importance to Australian families'.<sup>12</sup>

2.12 The then-Attorney-General addressed this issue in the Senate on the day the bill was introduced to Parliament:

The fact that we're undertaking such a comprehensive review must not arrest or abate more immediate needs for law reform. There are two the government identified and announced in the budget, one of which you have referred to—that is, parenting managing conferences. This is a pilot program, and I'm at pains to make that point. We are running two pilot programs. The first is to be commenced in the Parramatta registry in the middle of next year, and the second is to be commenced at a location yet to be announced at the end of next year. We are piloting a new mode for the resolution of disputes over children. It is paramount that the interests of children, when parents are separating, are treated with all the seriousness, care and concern that they deserve to be treated with. These are pilot programs. They don't detract from the more comprehensive review...<sup>13</sup>

2.13 The AGD also noted the ALRC review would take time to complete and implement, and so it would not be able to address the need for immediate reform of 'chronic and critical need' in the family law system.<sup>14</sup> Additionally, the AGD stressed that the bill only proposed pilot PMH programs, and that the outcomes of the trials would inform both the ALRC review and future Commonwealth policy:

The evaluation of the PMH pilot will be able to provide insights into the impact of a less-adversarial approach to resolving parenting disputes between unrepresented parties; as well as the effectiveness of the specific model proposed for the pilot in this Bill.

Any recommendations made by the ALRC relevant to PMH policy would be able to be taken into account when assessing whether the pilot should continue, be modified or terminated. Delaying the commencement of the pilot until after the conclusion of the ALRC review (31 March 2019) would significantly, and unnecessarily, defer the gathering of the empirical evidence necessary to support future decisions about the appropriateness, or otherwise, of an inquisitorial model for resolving parenting disputes.<sup>15</sup>

2.14 The AGD also pointed out that these bills and the ALRC review are not the only efforts being made by the Commonwealth to improve family law processes. It stated that other dispute resolution trials are also being undertaken in 'a broader program of work which is trying to better equip the sector to be able to support families and children'.<sup>16</sup>

Evidence base and lack of consultation

2.15 Some evidence questioned whether there was a robust evidence base for the PMH trials to be initiated.<sup>17</sup> For example, Ms Karen Willis, the Executive Officer of the Rape and Domestic Violence Services Australia (R&DVSA), told the committee:

...we were very concerned with the parent management program that was being proposed. In the first instance, the evidence on which it was based, when we checked it, really isn't terribly robust. The evidence was based on some work done where basically six people, three judges and three magistrates, were interviewed. Unfortunately, with people who are in positions of doing things like that, often their view will be influenced by 'what is best for me and what I think'. There weren't actually any clients of those courts involved in that review of that particular model. And of course the model that was being reviewed and evaluated, on which this is based—well, the recommendation here [in the bill] is different. So we're a bit concerned about the evidence base and we do think that, if we're going to be doing anything in the family law area, it needs to be evidence based.<sup>18</sup>

2.16 Some evidence argued the government had not undertaken consultation in developing the PMH policy.<sup>19</sup> For example, Ms Zoe Rathus AM submitted:

The timing of this Bill is rather strange and does not assist to build confidence in future consultation and review. The funding for the PMHP was allocated in the federal budget in May 2017. On the very evening the budget was brought down Professor Patrick Parkinson presented an address in the Banco Court of the Supreme Court of Queensland in which he described his vision for such a tribunal. At that stage there had been no public consultation on his vision, but in his address he advised that in January, 2017, Brian Cox SC, Dr Nicky McWilliam and he had provided a 'private paper for the Government' which had 'presented a comprehensive agenda ... for family law reform' and contained ideas he had canvassed that evening. So it seems that the money was allocated before the family law community had been given an opportunity to consider and comment on this extremely new, novel and untested tribunal model.<sup>20</sup>

2.17 Professor Patrick Parkinson AM and Mr Brian Knox SC addressed these concerns in their submission and appearance before the committee, referring not only to the consultation and research that was undertaken in developing the proposal, but also the consultation the Commonwealth undertook on an exposure draft of the bill. In particular, they referred to the widespread calls for Australia's family law system to trial a more inquisitorial process, the successes of the Informal Domestic Relations Trial in Oregon, USA, and Australia's positive experience with multi-disciplinary tribunals in a range of applications.<sup>21</sup>

2.18 Ms Paula Piccinini, the General Manager of Direct Services for EDVOS, also expressed positive views on the consultation that preceded the bill's introduction to Parliament:

We did have some input because, when the Attorney-General's Department was drafting the legislation, we were fortunate enough to receive a confidential draft and to respond to questions. We put in a submission to the Attorney-General's Department, and I spoke at length with some of the senior policy lawyers there about the legislation.<sup>22</sup>

21 Submission 3, pp. 3–5.

22 Proof Committee Hansard, 23 February 2018, p. 15.

2.19 As noted above, the AGD stressed in its submission that the PMH initiative was for a pilot program only, which would collect further evidence to inform future Commonwealth policy:

The department considers that a small pilot of this nature is an important step in building an evidence base about whether an inquisitorial and multidisciplinary approach to resolving parenting disputes is able to provide improved outcomes for families, whilst ensuring safety is prioritised. The pilot provides an opportunity to test the recommendations made by various reports and experienced practitioners about the merits of a less adversarial approach.<sup>23</sup>

Cost of the pilot

2.20 Some witnesses and submitters noted the significant cost of the PMH pilots. For example, the Hon Peter Rose AM QC, a former Judge of the Family Court of Australia, argued the PMH would be costly to pilot and implement more broadly. He noted it would be a 'multi-layered, cumbersome, lengthy and costly new structure' that necessitated 'a substantive new legal system; establishment of new decision making body; panel support staff including those with professional qualifications; panel staff and, potentially, consultants'.<sup>24</sup>

2.21 The AGD commented that the Commonwealth funding commitment of $12.7 million was for two fully-evaluated PMH trial sites over four years, as well as funding for support services, Independent Children's Lawyers (ICL) and an evaluation of the pilot.<sup>25</sup>

Selection and expertise of the panel

2.22 While some submissions supported the stipulations outlined in the bill for the expertise and experience of the principal and other members of Panels, others expressed some concerns.<sup>26</sup>

2.23 For example, Women's Legal Services Australia (WLSA) stated that each PMH should include one member with expertise in 'family violence, child abuse and trauma informed practice from a victim's-survivor's perspective'.<sup>27</sup>

2.24 A number of bodies representing the legal profession raised questions about the capacity of panels to determine cases fairly, ensure procedural fairness was applied, and guarantee the independence of panel members.<sup>28</sup>

27 Submission 17, p.12. The WLSA proposal was also explicitly supported by other submissions, including: safe steps Family Violence Response Centre, Submission 18, p. 6; Ms Rathus, Submission 21, p. 6.

28 HVFLPA, Submission 4, p. 5.

2.25 For example, Hunter Valley Family Law Practitioners Association (HVFLPA) noted that Panel members would 'be drawn from no more than lawyers and social scientists, which will be a lesser qualification than presiding judges that determine parenting cases presently'.<sup>29</sup> Similarly, the Victorian Family Law Bar Association (VFLBA) commented that the stipulations for non-legally trained members were too vague. It commented that panel members with extensive training and experience in the social sciences may not be as effective as judges in adjudicating parenting cases and ensuring procedural fairness:

It cannot seriously be contended that skill in the social science, or community or health work areas in any way qualifies a person as an impartial adjudicator to determine a dispute according to the law.

It is submitted that the unexplained, but central to the Panel concept, must be the notion that the appointed social scientists, community and health workers will somehow be better or more efficient adjudicators than Judges. There is simply no evidence to support such a notion. Judges and Justices should be appointed to deal with Family Law Act matters by reason of their experience, training and personality.<sup>30</sup>

2.26 Regarding these matters, the AGD submitted:

The qualification requirements set out in the Bill reflect the importance of having highly-skilled experts in a range of disciplines on the Panel, who will be well placed to identify risks and conduct proceedings in a way that is appropriate to the circumstances of each individual matter.<sup>31</sup>

2.27 On the legal expertise of the panel more specifically, the department stated:

The Bill adopts stricter, and arguably more onerous, qualification requirements for legally qualified members than those which are applicable to Family Court and the Federal Circuit Court judges. Legally qualified Panel Members must possess specialist knowledge and skills relevant to the duties of a Panel member including knowledge of and experience in matters of family law.<sup>32</sup>

The capacity to recognise and respond to family violence or child abuse

2.28 The committee noted concerns in evidence that the parenting management hearings may not be able to reliably assess and handle cases where there was family violence, either disclosed or undisclosed, including ensuring parties' safety and access to procedural fairness.

2.29 For example the Law Council argued that the proposal contained only a 'simplistic and ineffective mechanism' for recognising and dealing with victims or potential victims of family violence. It suggested existing system had several advantages over the proposed PMH, including: the automatic right to legal representation; access to relevant trained personnel to recognise and support family violence; judicial officers who were able to best ensure the safety of parties; and a court system that was adaptable to the needs of vulnerable parties and witnesses. It expressed concern that:

...the [PMH] model contemplates victims and perpetrators of family violence participating in an informal adjudication process. Such a proposal is at odds with other reform proposals in family law which seek to protect victims of family violence from direct engagement with the alleged perpetrator in the court process (see for instance, the reform proposals regarding direct cross examination of vulnerable witnesses). It is the experience of [the Family Law Section of the Law Council] that procedural fairness of victims (and alleged perpetrators) of family violence is best achieved in formal legal settings.<sup>33</sup>

2.30 This perspective was shared by other witnesses and submitters, including some who represented or worked with victims of family violence. For example, Ms Kajhal McIntyre, a Legal Researcher and Project Worker with R&DVSA, said:

We do note, of course, that there are several protections in this bill for people with family violence, but we suggest that they just don't go far enough...We would say that what we've ended up with is an uncomfortable compromise where there's a large amount of discretion in the panel as to whether or not they do hear family violence matters. We've heard a lot about what a complex versus a non-complex family violence matter looks like. We would say that almost all family violence matters are incredibly complex and it's not clear from the bill which matters are too complex for them to hear or how they'll be making that determination, so that's of great concern to us.<sup>34</sup>

2.31 Ms Rathus, a law academic appearing in a private capacity, commented:

What we continue to know is that actually getting these cases right where there's been severe family violence is extremely difficult, in a way no matter what model you use. I'm not confident that the make-up of that panel, the two-hour hearing and the lack of legal representation are going to mean that victims of family violence can get their case across any better on the papers there quickly than happens in other situations. And I'm very afraid that they won't but that what will come out that is a binding order perhaps too quickly.<sup>35</sup>

2.32 Some submissions were more favourable about the PMH being able to deal adequately with family violence.<sup>36</sup> For example, EDVOS submitted:

We firmly support Parenting Management Panels hearing matters involving allegations of family violence, a history of family violence and intervention orders.

The present adversarial system has failed to keep people safe or address family violence. Typically, only 5% of matters reach a final hearing. Parties do not get in the witness stand and have their evidence tested until the final hearing. Due to the high cost of court proceedings and long delays, the vast majority of matters settle at interim hearings where Judges make orders 'on the papers' without listening to the parties' circumstances...

We envisage that the inquisitorial system will address allegations of family violence from the outset. Panel members will be able to ask questions and enter into discussions with the parents from the first hearing. The Panel member with expertise in family violence will be able to conduct a risk assessment by asking the parties questions and observing their behaviour. The member with expertise in child development will be able to assess the impact or likely impact of the violence on the children. Arrangements can be put in place from the outset addressing the parties' risk, safety and wellbeing. We anticipate family violence victim survivors will be more protected in the inquisitorial system.<sup>37</sup>

2.33 The AGD acknowledged that the prevalence of family violence made it critical for any forum resolving family law disputes to be capable of identifying and responding effectively. It submitted that the PMH could not compel victims of family violence to participate in hearings, and that panels were bound to 'carefully consider each family's individual circumstances and make an assessment as to the appropriateness of the PMH forum', both for resolving the dispute and in managing the safety risks for all participants.<sup>38</sup>

2.34 The AGD noted that preliminary work that had considered a range of views regarding family violence and parenting decisions, and that:

We consider that the approach taken in the bill strikes an appropriate balance for a pilot. The bill provides that in all cases where family violence presents as an issue, the panel will be required to turn its mind to whether or not it is appropriate for the panel to consider the matter. Supported by appropriately trained staff, risk-screening procedures and powers to compel and obtain information and with multi-disciplinary representation on the panel itself, the department considers that the panel will be well placed to assess whether a matter involves a level of complexity that renders it inappropriate for it to determine.<sup>39</sup>

2.35 The AGD also drew the committee's attention to features of the PMH that would benefit victims of family violence:

37 Submission 11, p. 3.

38 Submission 26, pp. 11–12.

39 Ms Ashleigh Saint, Assistant Secretary, Attorney-General's Department, Proof Committee Hansard, 22 February 2018, p. 3.

- The inquisitorial model, which would allow the panel to ask questions directly to parties, as well as to seek other information from relevant individuals and organisations. This would avoid the need for direct cross-examination of parties, including the examination of a victim by a perpetrator as can occur in normal family court proceedings, which causes trauma and distress for victims;
- The multidisciplinary membership and qualifications of the panel required by the bill would mean the PMH is able to make decisions in complex cases, including family violence expertise being a mandated requirement for Principal Members of panels; and
- The provision of other services to participating parties through the PMH process, including specialist family violence expertise, and other support including drug and alcohol services.<sup>40</sup>

Risk assessment

2.36 Some evidence questioned the risk assessment process that would be used by the PMH, noting that the bill and Explanatory Memorandum do not outline it fully.<sup>41</sup> For example, although WLSA commended the inclusion of risk assessment process generally, it submitted that:

While reference is made to developing a risk assessment framework [in the bill and Explanatory Memorandum] it is not clear whether there will be ongoing risk assessment or risk assessment will be limited to risk assessment at intake. Risk in family violence matters is dynamic and may heighten or reduce over a given period. It should be made clear that the risk assessment will be ongoing whilst the parties are in the PMH process and that the person undertaking the risk assessment has the required professional skills to undertake this important task.<sup>42</sup>

2.37 Ms Helen Matthews, Principal Lawyer and Director, Legal and Policy of WLS Victoria and WLSA, expanded on this at a hearing:

And when we talk about risk assessment...that needs to be dynamic. We don't know what the time frames are necessarily going to be in the parenting management hearings, whether or not the intake happens and there is then a time lag between the collection of the material that people might be required to get and then the actual hearings. Situations can very much change as far as the family violence risk over that period of time is concerned.<sup>43</sup>

42 Submission 17, p. 9.

43 Proof Committee Hansard, 23 February 2018, p. 6.

2.38 WLSA's submission commented that, should the bill proceed, the government should ensure:

...required assurances are obtained about the need for ongoing risk assessment and that the professional [intake officer] undertaking the risk assessment has the required experience and expertise in family violence, child abuse and trauma informed practice.<sup>44</sup>

2.39 Ms Piccinini, EDVOS, outlined the way panels would go about recognising family violence, and ensuring appropriate risk assessment was undertaken:

Initially, there'll be a family violence risk assessment, but, on the panel, a professional from the social sciences should know how to continuously assess risk and manage risk. That's their expertise. I would be astonished if that's not the practice and if that won't be the practice. It just has to be. It's common sense that it will be, and it's good practice that it will be. In the mediation sphere, the family dispute resolution centres and the legislation that goes with those centres, it's actually legislated that a mediator must continuously assess risk. So it just makes sense that, on the panel, the social scientist will continuously assess risk, and they'll do that by asking the parents: 'How safe do you feel? What's happened recently? How were the children? Were they present? What was your observation of the children when that happened?' They have an understanding of the nature of family violence. Essentially, coercive controlling violence is the violence that kills. That's the really dangerous violence. They will be able to form an assessment as to whether or not that behaviour is escalating, and, if so, what needs to be put in place to keep this family safe and allow that child to thrive—and they'll do it continuously.<sup>45</sup>

2.40 The department pointed to the ability of the Principal Member of the PMH to determine processes for managing risk:

It is preferable that the details about how, and at what stages of the process, a risk assessment is to be conducted and revisited, and which identification and assessment tools should be used, are left to the Principal Member to determine, rather than expressly set out in the legislation. This provides the necessary flexibility within the pilot to make sensible adjustments to operational processes.

The specification of operational processes for the Panel, though rules and other directions issued by the Principal Member, is an approach that is consistent with the case-management processes currently employed in the family law courts.<sup>46</sup>

Supporting diverse applicants

2.41 A number of submissions outlined the potential dangers of having panels that were not sufficiently trained to support families from diverse backgrounds, particularly for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander clients.<sup>47</sup>

2.42 For example, the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Legal Service (Qld) Limited (ATSILS (Qld)) noted the significant barriers that Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities have in participating in the court or panel-based resolution forums, and commented that the bill was largely silent on these issues. It questioned whether panels would be able to adequately understand and address and potential cultural obstacles, behavioural difficulties and their own unwitting cultural biases.<sup>48</sup>

2.43 People with Disabilities Australia (PWDA) stressed the need for the PMH to have appropriate training, awareness or experience in working with people with disabilities.<sup>49</sup>

2.44 WLSA advised that all panel members should have cultural competency and ongoing training opportunities for working with a number of communities:

All Panel members and staff conducting risk assessments should be culturally competent, disability aware and have ongoing training in cultural competency; disability awareness; family violence, child abuse and trauma informed practice; and working with vulnerable clients.<sup>50</sup>

2.45 The AGD addressed these comments in its submission:

The department agrees that cultural competency and diversity awareness is an important feature in providing family law services. The department expects that Panel members would have ongoing training and support to assist them in dealing with a range of issues including identifying and responding to family violence and child cultural competency.

The Bill specifically provides that the Panel must have regard to any kinship obligations, and child-rearing practices, of the child's Aboriginal or Torres Strait Islander culture (section 11JA) and that if the child is an Aboriginal child or a Torres Strait Islander child, then the child's right to enjoy his or her culture, and the likely impact any proposed parenting determination will have on that right, is one of the mandatory additional considerations the Panel must consider in determining the child's best interests (paragraph 11JB(4)(i)).

Parties will be entitled to have a support person with them in the hearing (section 11LJ). This provision will allow the Panel to accommodate the needs of applicants with disabilities who may require physical assistance when appearing before the Panel, or the needs of people from culturally and linguistically diverse backgrounds who, for example, may require an interpreter.

The Panel will be multi-disciplinary, with Panel members with a range of qualifications appointed on both a full-time and part-time basis. This approach will allow the Principal Member to ensure the constitution of the Panel is appropriate for the particular case, taking into account the particular needs and issues of the families involved.<sup>51</sup>

Consent

2.46 The PMH requires the positive written consent of both parties to submit their case for decision. A number of concerns regarding this were raised, including:

- The Law Council's concern that the panel has the discretion—rather than the obligation—to dismiss cases where consent is obtained by fraud, threat, duress or coercion;<sup>52</sup> and
- The Law Council and Victorian Family Law Bar's concerns that parties could manipulate the system by withdrawing their consent at 'a time of perceived disadvantage in the Panel system'.<sup>53</sup>

2.47 In response to the former concern, the AGD noted that the bill was consistent with the approach taken in the Family Law Act, citing the court's power to alter decisions in cases of fraud, duress or false evidence, including rescinding a divorce order under section 58, or varying a property order under section 79A.<sup>54</sup>

2.48 Responding to the concerns of the VFLBA, the department noted that the decision to discontinue an application was contingent on this being requested by both parties. On potential manipulation, it commented:

...concerns that the requirement for consent may allow parties to manipulate the system—for instance, by consenting to the hearing and then alleging a matter that would require the Panel to dismiss the application (by for example, alleging child sexual abuse or seeking a relocation order). While this is a possibility, the department considers that the risk is low, given the serious nature of such allegations/orders which would require dismissal. Evidence of this kind of manipulation would be sought and assessed through the evaluation of the pilot.<sup>55</sup>

PMH proceedings

2.49 A number of concerns were raised about the way PMH proceedings would be conducted, including that the bill:

- does not include an explicit provision for the Panel to provide affected children with an opportunity to provide their views, with some submissions arguing that an Independent Children's Lawyer (ICL) should be provided in every case;<sup>56</sup>
- would empower a Panel under section 11R to require a person provides specified information or documents, and that failure to do so would be an offence, which would impermissibly allow the Panel to exercise judicial power;<sup>57</sup> [and]
- would not sufficiently protect sensitive information, including counselling records, and would fail to encourage the 'the need for family law professionals to commit to adopting victim-survivor centric practices which should include guidelines for seeking least intrusive forms of evidence first'.<sup>58</sup>

2.50 Regarding opportunities for children to express their views, the National Children's Commissioner of the AHRC, Ms Meghan Mitchell, told the committee:

The amendments do not give children who are affected by a parenting matter that is before the proposed panel sufficient opportunity to express their views, in accordance with article 12 of the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child. Notably, the bill does not require the panel to provide an opportunity for a child to express their views but to consider any views that may be expressed through a family consultant or an independent children's lawyer. The commission is concerned that, without a requirement to seek the views of children, panel members, as with judges, will be hesitant to seek out the views of children using mechanisms available to them. Studies consistently show that children want to have more of a say in legal decisions affecting them.<sup>59</sup>

2.51 The department submitted that the approach taken was to give discretion to the panel, and was consistent with the processes used by family courts. More specifically, it commented:

The Bill ensures the right of the child to be heard by requiring the Panel to consider the child's views in determining the best interests of the child to the extent that these views are available (paragraph 11JB(4)(a)). The Panel can seek the child's view in a number of ways, including by requesting a family consultant to ascertain the child's views or appointing a lawyer to independently represent the child's interests (section 11LK). The Panel retains flexibility to give weight to a child's views in accordance with the age and maturity of the child...

It will be at the Panel's discretion to determine when it would be appropriate [an ICL to be appointed]. The department does not anticipate that an ICL would be appointed in simple matters, or where the Panel determines that a child is able to communicate their views via another means. Where that is the case, the Panel could ascertain the views of the child in the manner provided for in the Panel rules (paragraph 11JC(2)(c)).<sup>60</sup>

2.52 On the risk of the PMH exercising judicial powers, the AGD commented that any offences would be prosecuted by courts, rather than the Panel itself, consistent with the practice of other Commonwealth bodies.<sup>61</sup>

2.53 The department commented that the Panel's handling of sensitive information would be addressed by Principal Member's Directions and general guidelines that will 'take into account these concerns, particularly in...the PMH's general approach to dealing appropriately with matters involving family violence'.<sup>62</sup>

Legal advice before and during PMH processes

2.54 The committee received some evidence arguing that parties to PMH arbitration should clearly understand the legal issues affecting their case, and have full knowledge that decisions made by the Panel are final and only subject to limited legal review.<sup>63</sup> For example, Ms Matthews, WLSA, stated:

I think there needs to be opportunity for the potential participant in the panel to be able to explore what their legal issues are. If people were to self assess whether their matter was a simple matter or a complex matter—because they'll probably have confidence that their view on how it should turn out is pretty much the right view—they may not recognise the complexity of the issues that they would be bringing before the panel. I would also be concerned if people were offered, 'You could go to court and wait 2½ years for a final determination in your matter or you could go to court and have a few hours before a panel' They really need to have a bit more information before them about that, where the adviser has the opportunity to learn more about the potential participant situation.<sup>64</sup>

2.55 WLSA submission's outlined these concerns in greater detail:

Access to legal advice and representation will be vitally important to ensure vulnerable or disadvantaged parties (including women experiencing violence) understand their legal options in order. In the case of PMHs, it is important that parties understand the process, consider whether it is an appropriate forum in their circumstances and understand the consequence of a binding parenting determination prior to making or consenting to a parenting determination application. It will be important that parties referred to the PMH forum are also referred for legal advice.

Whilst we acknowledge that many people already navigate the family law system unrepresented, WLSA has significant concerns that matters involving complex factors, including family violence and some forms of child abuse, will be dealt with in a forum designed for self-represented litigants, where lawyers are not permitted except with leave.<sup>65</sup>

2.56 WLSA recommended that, given these concerns, parties be able to access legal assistance before entering into a PMH process; that leave for legal representation is granted by the PMH when requested where any of the mandatory considerations are met; and that this legal assistance is funded, particularly in cases involving family violence or child abuse, including for a range of specialist legal services.<sup>66</sup>

2.57 Evidence included divergent views on the bill's provision that legal representation would only be allowed with leave of the Panel, and subject to Panel directions. Some evidence supported this, as it indicated a new non-adversarial approach, whereas others suggested this may disadvantage some parties.<sup>67</sup>

2.58 The Law Council stated that it:

...opposes the implementation of any system, be it a Panel or otherwise, that excludes the parties from the right to independent legal representation before it (see new s11LJ).

While a discretion rests in the Panel to permit a party to have legal representation, the Panel may also give directions limiting the role of the legal practitioner in the proceedings (s11LJ(3)) which may constrain the ability of a legal practitioner to discharge their professional and ethical duties and obligations to their client.<sup>68</sup>

2.59 WLSA suggested that access to good legal representation was paramount for the safety of many participants in family law cases.<sup>69</sup>

2.60 Some submissions noted that the Panel could approve legal representation in hearings, and recommended the bill provide that when one party is permitted representation, then this right should also be extended to the other party. For example, Professor Parkinson and Mr Knox recommended that in the interests of procedural fairness, 'If leave to have legal representation is given to one party, the other must automatically have a right to legal representation as well'.<sup>70</sup>

2.61 The department made the following points on legal advice and representation:

...while it is envisaged that parties will be unrepresented in the oral hearing stage of the Panel process (unless the Panel gives leave), section 11LJ does not preclude a party from seeking and obtaining advice in relation to, or connection with, their parenting matter. Seeking and obtaining such advice prior to making, or consenting to, an application to the Panel will be recommended.

The approach taken in the Bill in relation to legal representation is not unique. Requiring permission to be legally represented is a feature of other administrative bodies...

The Panel is a consent based forum; it is open to parties to choose to use the family law courts if they wish to be legally represented in the hearing stage of their family law parenting matter.<sup>71</sup>

2.62 Moreover, the AGD also commented:

The Panel is bound by the principal of procedural fairness. A party would be entitled to seek judicial review of a Panel decision on the basis that procedural fairness has not been observed.

The approach taken to the issue of legal representation is intended to strike the appropriate balance between preserving the benefits of an inquisitorial system designed primarily for self-represented litigants, and allowing for legal representation in the hearing when necessary, including where it would promote the safety of families utilising the Panel.<sup>72</sup>

Determining relocation matters

2.63 The bill provides that, where an application is for the relocation of the child, the application must be dismissed (proposed subsection 11NA(2)). Some evidence supported the PMH being empowered to make decisions in relocation matters, whereas other perspectives suggested decision making should remain with family courts.

2.64 For example, RAV suggested that PMH proceedings should be able to consider relocation matters, given they were not grounds for exclusion in family dispute resolution processes.<sup>73</sup> And Professor Parkinson and Mr Knox suggested a test could be considered for inclusion in the bill, where a move of less than 100 km could be considered by the PMH, provided this move was not interstate.<sup>74</sup>

2.65 The ADG responded to these suggestions in its submission:

Relocation matters have been excluded from the jurisdiction of the Panel on the basis of advice from the family law courts that these matters are typically complex in nature as a change in where the child lives may substantially affect the child's ability to live with or spend time with a parent or other person who is significant to the child's care, welfare and development.<sup>75</sup>

Commencement of determinations

2.66 Professor Parkinson and Mr Knox recommended that the bill specify that determinations made by a Panel commence on the day of determination, unless another day is specified. They justified this as follows:

Section 11PD provides that the determination does not come into effect until a day specified in the determination. This is an example of a level of detail which could cause difficulties without any great benefits. It requires the Panel to remember to put in a commencement date for every determination. By way of contrast, court orders take effect from the time they are made unless specified otherwise.<sup>76</sup>

Review of PMH decisions

2.67 A number of concerns were raised to the committee about the right of review of the PMH process, including that Panel decisions can be appealed in the Federal Circuit Court only on a point of law, rather than merits.

2.68 Some submissions noted that the right of appeal afforded by the bill would be, in effect, much more limited than appeal of court decisions.<sup>77</sup> Moreover, it was also noted that the Federal Circuit Court is only able to set aside a PMH decision and refer the matter back to the Panel to be terminated or re-decided—rather than being able to make its own decision.<sup>78</sup>

2.69 The AGD noted that, despite some limited similarities between family courts and the PMH in exercising Part VII of the Family Law Act, there were significant differences:

Parenting determinations will be made by an expert, multi-disciplinary Panel who will be well qualified to make determinations in the best interests of the child. Unlike the courts, the forum is consent-based, and parties cannot be compelled to participate. Appeal on a question of law only is consistent with the approach to arbitration under the Family Law Act (section 13J)—which is another consent-based mechanism for resolving family law disputes.<sup>79</sup>

2.70 The department also noted:

Subsection 11Q(5) enables the Federal Circuit Court to make findings of fact by providing it can only do so if they are not inconsistent with those made by the Panel. The Court can, however, make findings of fact overriding those of the Panel where the Panel's findings are the result of an error of law—for example, where the Panel did not make any findings in relation to relevant facts. In doing so, it would be appropriate for the Court to receive evidence.

The department considers it appropriate that the court be required to remit a decision back to the Panel if it sets aside a decision of the Panel. The intention is not for the Federal Circuit Court to be used as a forum to re-litigate the issues of the case. As such, the court is limited to hearing appeals on matters of law and limited findings of fact. In remitting a matter back to the Panel, it will be open to the court to issue directions to the Panel that it must adhere to in re-determining the matter.

The Bill allows for a parenting determination to be reconsidered by the Panel (subsection 11NA(6)), or a court (section 65DABA), if there has been a significant change in circumstances in relation to the child.<sup>80</sup>

2.71 The bill provides that a party may request written reasons for a parenting determination within 28 days, when the Panel has only provided reasons orally. WLSA recommended that the Panel be given discretion to provide written reasons beyond this 28-day limit.<sup>81</sup> The AGD commented that this provision is consistent with other administrative tribunal practice, and designed to ensure the efficient resolution of disputes.<sup>82</sup>

Interaction with court or family violence orders

2.72 Some evidence raised concerns about the way PMH decisions would interact with prior court orders on parenting decisions, or family violence orders issued subsequently to Panel decisions.

Court orders

2.73 The Law Society's submission was concerned that the Panel would be able to 'vary or discharge orders made by a court in certain circumstances', and argued that this would be tantamount to the PMH having the power to review a judicial decision.<sup>83</sup>

82 Submission 26, pp. 19–20.

83 Referencing the bill's proposed subsections 11NA(9), (10) and (11). Submission 20, p. 20.

2.74 The AGD conceded that the PMH would usually be required to dismiss applications where a court had already made a parenting order, unless there has been a 'significant change in circumstances in relation to the child'. The department expanded on this as follows:

This is intended to be consistent with the common law test applied by the family law courts when considering whether to change an existing parenting order. In Rice and Asplund, the court set out that a parenting order should only be varied if there is some changed circumstance sufficient to justify such a serious step or a new factor has arisen.

The intention is that families are not precluded from accessing the Panel, which may provide them with a quicker, cheaper and inquisitorial forum for resolving disputes, simply because they have an earlier parenting order in place. Parenting arrangements may need to be reconsidered and re-determined as the child gets older and circumstances change, and parents may prefer to seek an outcome through the Panel rather than a court. The consent-based nature of the PMH forum is also relevant.<sup>84</sup>

2.75 The department further noted that this accords with the existing approach that families should be encouraged to seek to vary parenting orders by agreement, rather than through the courts, where possible. Moreover, it drew the committees' attention to existing safeguards in section 64D(2) of the Act, which:

...allows the court to, in exceptional circumstances, provide that an order of the court can only be varied by a subsequent order of the court (and not by a parenting plan) –thereby excluding this option. As noted in the relevant explanatory memorandum, this approach might be adopted by the court if the court has concerns that a later parenting plan would not be made in the best interests of the child.

A similar safeguard has been included in the Bill in relation to the ability of the Panel to deal with an application if a parenting order is already in force in relation to the child. Subsection 11NA(11) provides that the Panel must dismiss the application if the relevant parenting order contained a provision that the order must not be varied by a parenting determination. The Bill expressly empowers the court to include such a restriction in a parenting order (new section 64E(2)).<sup>85</sup>

Family violence orders

2.76 The Explanatory Memorandum outlines that proposed section 11PY of the bill:

...would clarify that where there is an existing parenting determination, and a state or territory court makes a subsequent family violence order, the family violence order would be invalid to the extent of any inconsistency with the parenting determination.<sup>86</sup>

84 Submission 26, p. 21.

85 Submission 26, p. 21.

86 Explanatory Memorandum, p. 84.

2.77 Some evidence argued that this may place children in unsafe situations, where a family violence order against one parent was lodged following a PMH decision.<sup>87</sup> Regarding this, the Law Council submitted that it was:

...concerned as to the appropriateness of giving paramountcy to a determination by a Panel over a later family violence order made by a Magistrate of a State/Territory court and is of the opinion that it undermines safety considerations.<sup>88</sup>

2.78 Judge Graeme Henson, Chief Magistrate of the Local Court of New South Wales, suggested that primacy must be given to the findings of courts that are issued subsequent to PMH decisions:

It is essential that the proposed amendments to section 68R accompany the insertion of section IIPY to ensure a State court is not bound by the Panel's determinations when making family violence orders which post-date such determinations. There must be enough flexibility in the proposed interaction of these two areas to ensure that a State court is able make orders for the adequate protection of those persons who are the subject of a determination.<sup>89</sup>

2.79 The AGD provided further detail about this in a submission:

The Bill provides state and territory courts with power to vary, suspend, or discharge a parenting determination when the state or territory court has evidence that was not before the Panel. That is, in being given the power to change pre-existing parenting determinations, the state and territory courts will be able to ensure that parenting determinations and family violence orders in respect of the same family are consistent (see amended section 68R).

This is consistent with the current approach for parenting orders made by the court, and ensures that the safety of parties will always be paramount.<sup>90</sup>

2.80 The department further clarified this issue at a public hearing:

Under the bill, the parenting management hearings panel will not be able to make a determination that is inconsistent with a court order, including a state or territory family violence order. The bill also sets out that a state or territory court can't make a family violence order that is inconsistent with a parenting determination. However, it's important that this provision is read together with the power of the state and territory court to alter the parenting determination. So for the latter example, we are getting at ensuring that we don't have inconsistent arrangements in place.

I will take you through an example. There is a parenting determination in place made by a parenting management hearing, and there's a subsequent family violence incident responded to by the state or territory police. It lands in a state or territory court, and it's necessary, for example, to restrict access or contact between the two parents. What the state or territory court could do in making the family violence order, for example, would be to adjust the parenting determination to provide that changeover for the children is to occur in a particular contact centre or a police station and not person to person, which might have been what was provided for in the order before. So that's the way that those orders are to work together.<sup>91</sup>

2.81 The department also informed the committee that the Commonwealth was developing new programs of family law training for state and territory judicial officers, to assist them exercising family law jurisdiction.<sup>92</sup>

Other concerns

Enforcement

2.82 The Law Society expressed some concerns with the enforcement of panel decisions, including:

- That a party who alleges a breach would be required to file an application in the Federal Circuit Court, and file evidence in accordance with the Rules of Court, which could lead to long delays in decisions; and
- That there would be no additional funding for courts to undertake this enforcement function.

2.83 Regarding these concerns, the department stated that all PMH determinations would be enforceable in the same way as court parenting orders, consistent with decisions of other Commonwealth administrative bodies. On individuals filing breaches, the department noted that 'the enforcement system used by the court is well established, and that issues related to enforcement of parenting determinations made in the pilot phase will be monitored and evaluated'.<sup>93</sup>

2.84 Additionally, the AGD stated that it did not expect PMH processes to significantly increase the workload for the court system.<sup>94</sup>

Dismissal

Panel determination, noting that the bill contains 'no apparent rights or recourses to be transferred to the more appropriate venue of a family court'.<sup>95</sup>

2.86 The department agreed that in these cases, there would be a need for support for other forms of resolution. In particular, it stressed that this would be dealt with administratively, rather than through a legislative transfer mechanism.<sup>96</sup>

2.87 The department stressed that the pilot site in Parramatta would be co-located with family law courts, and so have a range of free-to-access support services that would ensure dismissed families would be adequately supported. These would include Commonwealth-funded legal services staffed by specialists in family violence support services for both women and men. The department also stressed that the second trial site would also be chosen with regard to the availability of similar co-located support services.<sup>97</sup>

Payment of Fees

2.88 Some submissions questioned the PMH's powers to dismiss an application if fees required by regulation have not been paid within the prescribed period (proposed subsection 11NA(15)). It was suggested that there could be waivers for certain types of participants, or discretion for a Panel not to dismiss applications in some cases where fees had not been paid, including due to hardship or other extenuating circumstances.<sup>98</sup>

2.89 The department noted that no fees would be charged in the pilot program. Moreover, it also noted that the bill amends the Family Law Act to allow for particular exemptions of fees to be made.<sup>99</sup>

Transcripts

2.90 WLSA also suggested that transcripts of hearings should be free or low cost.<sup>100</sup> The department noted that transcripts would be available through services linked to a particular court or tribunal, and that the bill did not provide for the cost of this service, consistent with standard administrative tribunal practice.<sup>101</sup>

Evaluation

2.91 The Family Court of Australia submitted that there was insufficient information in the bill about the process and criteria of the PMH evaluation. This submission advised that the bill could include details of evaluation, and pointed to

2.92 The National Council of Single Mothers and their Children Inc. and The Council of Single Mothers and their Children (Victoria) Inc. recommended that the evaluation should include the experiences of litigants and children, and seek to include those participants 'who were least likely to volunteer their views'.<sup>103</sup>

2.93 A number of submissions suggested that the Commonwealth should make the evaluation of the pilot program public, to ensure transparency and accountability in both the pilot and future rollout, should this occur.<sup>104</sup>

2.94 On this, the AGD submitted that the evaluation of the PMH would commence with the launch of the pilots, and so early findings could inform the ongoing ALRC review. Regarding the findings, the department stated that any public release of the evaluation would be a matter for government.<sup>105</sup>

Hosting by the Federal Court

2.95 The VFLBA questioned why the Federal Court was hosting the PMH, rather than the Family or Federal Circuit Court.

2.96 The AGD pointed out that the Courts Administration Legislation Amendment Act 2016 had created a 'single federal court administrative entity', of which the PMH would be a part. The AGD stated that the Federal Court was merely providing funding and administrative arrangements for the pilots and:

...the Panel itself would not form part of the court. Decisions and parenting determinations made by Panel members would be administrative in nature (that is, these will not be an exercise of judicial power).<sup>106</sup>

Funding and resourcing for courts and legal services

2.97 Some submissions and witnesses argued that there should be an increase in Commonwealth funding to the legal aid sector and/or to the courts, to drive efficiency and enhance the assistance made available to parties in parenting disputes.<sup>107</sup> In addition, some evidence pointed to potential diversion of scant funds for the sector into the Panel process, which could deplete courts and support services of badly needed funds.<sup>108</sup>

Rule-making power

2.98 Some evidence noted the power of the Minister to make rules about Panel practice and procedure, which could represent a departure from the principle of separation of powers between the executive and judiciary.<sup>109</sup>

2.99 The department observed that the bill contains only a standard legislative instrument making provision, which is a general feature across Commonwealth legislation. It further notes that more detailed procedures for the Panel to follow would be included in Principal Member Directions made under 11VA of the bill.<sup>110</sup>

Committee view and recommendations

2.100 Evidence received by the committee on this bill broadly agreed that Australia's family law system is in need of radical and comprehensive reform. The committee notes the ALRC is working on a review to inform broad Commonwealth systemic reform, to be handed to government in March 2019.

2.101 A number of witnesses and submitters noted that any systemic reform should include consideration of a shift away from the adversarial model that typifies many family court cases, toward models that encourage inquisitorial decision making or arbitration.

2.102 The committee understands that the effect of this bill will represent a significant shift in how disputes in parenting matters following separation are resolved, toward a more inquisitorial model that would assist many cases being decided without going to court. The department has made it clear that the findings of these pilots will inform not only the potential broader rollout of the PMH program, should it prove to be successful, but also the ongoing review of the family law system being undertaken by the ALRC and other future reform decisions made by the Commonwealth.

2.103 Regarding evidence recommending a delay in the trial of the program until after the ALRC's work is finished, the committee makes two comments. First, comprehensive reform of legal systems is a slow process, and it is important to look at ways the system can be improved for participants, their children, and wider families as soon as possible. Second, it is the government's intention that early findings of the PMH pilot will inform the ALRC's evidence base and deliberations, which will in turn assist the long-term goal of holistic reform of the entire family law system.

2.104 Some views expressed to the committee questioned the evidence base and consultation that underpinned the PMH pilots. However, the committee also heard that the model proposed in the bill has been successfully tested, not only through the inquisitorial-based model in Oregon, but also a wide range of multi-disciplinary tribunals used in Australia, and consultation undertaken by the department.

109 Law Council, Submission 20, pp. 9–10.

110 Submission 26, p. 22.

2.105 Some evidence questioned whether the Panel would be able to assess determine cases fairly, ensure procedural fairness and maintain independence in decision making, particularly in complex cases involving family violence. The committee heard and agrees that a multidisciplinary PMH would be more effective, efficient and procedurally fair in many cases that currently go to court, and that the proposal has sufficient safeguards to recognise and deal with cases of family violence that come before the Panel. This includes the flexibility for Panels to refer matters on to courts should they judge it necessary, including complex cases involving family violence.

2.106 Success will hinge on the PMH having a rigorous and well-defined risk management process, particularly around family violence issues, and the Principal and other Members having the experience and skills to manage risk appropriately for the safety of all parties to a hearing. The AGD submitted that the Principal Member would have some discretion in managing risk assessment appropriately for different cases, and that the multi-disciplinary nature of PMH would ensure the available skills and awareness of family violence were adequate.

2.107 Similarly, the committee considers that the expertise on Panels will enable effective recognition of cases where one party has been coerced into participation, allowing the Panel to refer the case on for resolution in court proceedings.

2.108 That said, the committee sees some merit in the argument made by some submitters, that risk assessment is not a 'one-off' activity undertaken at the beginning of a particular case being considered by a PMH, but an ongoing process that is continued and revisited until a decision is made. This could be done either by the Attorney-General issuing practice directions or by regulation.

2.109 The committee considers that the multidisciplinary nature of the Panel would ensure the process is able to support a diverse range of parties, including Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islanders, people with a disability, and applicants with culturally and linguistically diverse backgrounds. Additionally, the committee is satisfied that the views of children will be sought and represented appropriately and sensitively in cases being decided by the PMH.

2.110 On the processes of the PMH, the committee strongly supports the contention put by a number of submitters that all participants in PMH processes should be made fully aware of the legal ramifications of engaging in the PMH process, including that all decisions made by the Panel are final and only subject to limited legal review, before agreeing to proceed. The committee recommends that practices and procedures be put in place to ensure this happens.

2.111 The committee also supports the recommendation made in evidence that, should one party be granted leave for legal representation, the other party should have that right extended to them, and recommends accordingly.

2.112 The committee sees merit in further considering the recommendation that the Panel be given the authority to determine some relocation matters, where the distance is less than 100 km, and recommends accordingly.

2.113 Similarly, an amendment specifying that determinations come into effect on the day they are made, unless another date is specified by the Panel, is needed. The committee recommends that either amendment to the bill, or to the relevant regulations, be implemented to address this matter.

2.114 The committee notes the concerns raised in evidence about the interplay of court and family violence orders and decisions of the PMH, and strongly agrees that the safety of parties to PMH and their families should be paramount. The committee accepts the evidence provided by the AGD that these concerns have been appropriately considered and accounted for in the bill, and that the regime being proposed is consistent with other current practice.

2.115 On the rule making power of the Minister, the right of review of decisions, and the cost and availability of transcripts, the committee understands from the department that these provisions are in line with the standard practices of other Australian tribunals. The committee recommends that appropriate guidelines be developed around the use of sensitive records and evidence by a PMH.

2.116 Regarding the public release of evaluation of the pilot program, the committee sees merit in the proposal that the Commonwealth should publically release the findings of the evaluation. This would ensure that any rollout of the program would be transparent and accountable. The committee recommends accordingly.

2.117 The committee considers that the trials proposed by the bill represent a positive step forward for affected parties, and that the PMH trials will provide valuable experience and knowledge in the reform of the family law system in the future.

2.118 Generally the committee notes that the jurisdiction of the Panel to hear any matter requires the consent of all parties. Failing that consent, the existing system will apply, but the committee also notes that there is universal concern at some aspects of the current arrangements dealing with children and believes that the proposal in the bill is a positive step forward if it is taken with the necessary safeguards.

Recommendation 1

2.119 The committee recommends that practices and procedures be put in place to ensure that all parties to Parenting Management Hearings are made fully aware of the legal ramifications of engaging in the process.

Recommendation 2

2.120 The committee recommends that should one party be granted leave for legal representation, the other party should also be granted leave.

Recommendation 3

2.121 The committee recommends that the government consider giving the Panel authority to determine relocation matters where the distance of the relocation is less than 100 kilometres.

Recommendation 4

2.122 The committee recommends that amendments be made to either the bill, or to the relevant regulations, to ensure that Panel determinations come into effect on the day they are made, unless another date is specified by the Panel.

Recommendation 5

2.123 The committee recommends that appropriate guidelines be developed to govern the use and storage of sensitive records and evidence by a Parenting Management Panel.

Recommendation 6

2.124 The committee recommends that the government publicly release the evaluation of the Parenting Management Hearing pilot program.

Recommendation 7

2.125 On the basis that the government will seriously consider and, where appropriate, action the recommendations made, the committee recommends that the bill be passed.

Opposition Senators' Dissenting Report

1.1 Opposition Senators oppose the Family Law Amendment (Parenting Management Hearings) Bill 2017.

Overview

1.2 Of all the decisions that judges are required to make, the heaviest burden arises when in the decision over how, when, where, and with whom a child will spend their childhood.

1.3 This Bill proposes, as a pilot program, an alternative radical departure from the current manner in which these important decisions are determined. The Bill provides for the creation of a non-judicial panel, comprised of lay persons without legal training or experience of the crucial decisions that are made in respect of children following family breakdown. This panel would be statutorily empowered to make binding decisions about parenting matters.

1.4 The Panel would have complete discretion over the procedure for the Parenting Management Hearing (PMH) and can inform itself in any way it thinks fit. There ordinary rules of evidence and procedural fairness will be departed from. The possibility that this could occasion prejudice or lead to outcomes based on erroneous evidence which would be accepted in a court called on to make the same determination is likely productive of gross unfairness.

1.5 The Panel's power, under proposed s 11ME, includes the ability to direct a party to give the Panel information or documents, whether or not the documents or information are relevant to the resolution of the dispute is an extraordinary departure from the proper processes that limit the evidence that can be adduced for the purpose of dispute resolution. In a fundamentally improper way, the Bill proposes that a failure to provide information sought by the panel under section 11ME, whether or not it is actually relevant, could lead to a criminal penalty being imposed of up to twelve months imprisonment.. Given that the purpose of this panel is to provide a setting in which family disputes may be resolved without proceedings commencing in court, it is extraordinary that a failure to abide by the direction of the panel may lead to a penalty that could be harsher than the punishment ordered by a court for contempt

1.6 Opposition Senators have other serious concerns about the PMH which include:

- Matters involving family violence will not be prevented from inclusion in the PMH pilot.
- Parties do not have the right to be legally represented when appearing before the PMH.
- There is no merits review available for a determination of a Parenting Management Panel.

A Radical Change to Family Law Proceedings

1.7 Family law proceedings can already be dealt with in a less adversarial manner under Division 12A of Part VII of the Family Law Act but Parenting Management Hearings would be a radical departure to even that less adversarial approach, they would be conducted in an inquisitorial manner.

1.8 The Women's Legal Services Australia submission stated in its submission to the Committee:-

While there is merit in considering an inquisitorial model (in contrast to the traditional adversarial model) it is important that any such model is developed with careful consideration and a particular focus on protections required for victims-survivors of family violence and in matters relating to child abuse. It is also important that any new model is accessible – for example, for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities, culturally and linguistically diverse (CALD) communities, people with disabilities, LGBTIQ+ communities, people in regional, rural and remote areas.<sup>1</sup>

1.9 The Chief Justice of the Family Court, Chief Justice Pascoe, in his submission also raised some concerns about PMHs being conducted in an inquisitorial manner. He said:

...the Bill provides for the Panel to inform itself in any way it thinks fit in conducting a Parenting Management Hearing. A concern that the Court has consistently expressed is that this departs significantly from the principle of procedural fairness, and that is perplexing, given that a lack of procedural fairness is a prime circumstance allowing for an appeal to the Federal Circuit Court of Australia.<sup>2</sup>

1.10 While Opposition Senators recognise there is merit in looking at inquisitorial models of family law decision making we agree with key submitters that stakeholders have not been given sufficient input into the bill before the Parliament. As the the Hon. Peter Rose AM QC said in his opening statement to the Committee 'children and families are far too important to be made the subject of an experiment'.<sup>3</sup>

1.11 Ms Zoe Rathus AM in her submission said about the timing of the Bill:

The timing of this Bill is rather strange and does not assist to build confidence in future consultation and review. The funding for the PMHP was allocated in the federal budget in May 2017. 1 On the very evening the budget was brought down Professor Patrick Parkinson presented an address in the Banco Court of the Supreme Court of Queensland in which he described his vision for such a tribunal.<sup>2</sup> At that stage there had been no public consultation on his vision, but in his address he advised that in January, 2017, Brian Cox SC, Dr Nicky McWilliam and he had provided a 'private paper for the Government' which had 'presented a comprehensive agenda ... for family law reform' and contained ideas he had canvassed that evening. So it seems that the money was allocated before the family law community had been given an opportunity to consider and comment on this extremely new, novel and untested tribunal model.<sup>4</sup>

1.12 Ms Zoe Rathus AM, like others before the Committee, argued that the Parliament should wait for the Australian Law Reform Commission (ALRC) to report on the Family Law System before considering legislating:

It worries me that the number of submissions received is not particularly reflective yet of an engaged family law community, so if this goes ahead then it's really going ahead without the benefit of the kind of discussion and debate that I would have thought should come before something as innovative—'innovative' is a very positive term, and maybe that's fine because it is innovative, but it's also new, untested and extremely different to our current ways of doing things. I'm not saying that we should never do anything differently; I'm saying if we are going to do it, let's involve more information about it, let's do better backgrounding before we start it.<sup>5</sup>

1.13 Former Family Court Justice, the Hon. Peter Rose noted that:

...the bill incorporates large portions of part VII of the Family Law Act which makes it compulsory—not a matter of discretion—to decide the best interests of the child by making various findings of fact about a whole host of factors and, in doing so, you have to apply legal principles that have been the subject of jurisprudence for quite some time. If a body charged with making some determination about children thinks, 'We're going to knock this over in a couple of hours and there'll be a quick decision,' if you place yourself in the position of a parent or someone else who has an interest in the care of a child, that's providing, in effect, a second-class system because you happen to be unrepresented and you can't afford legal aid.<sup>6</sup>

1.14 As the ALRC is already undertaking a comprehensive review of the family law system, Labor Senators believe that such a radical change would be better considered by the ALRC in their review before being implemented.

Impact on Victims of Domestic Violence

1.15 Opposition Senators are particularly concerned about the potential for unjust outcomes for victims and survivors of family violence and their children who participate in Parenting Management Hearings.

1.16 Opposition Senators also have regard for the views of the Women's Legal Services Australia, as Ms Liz Snell expressed to the committee:

...we recognise there are limitations to an adversarial system and that the current system is failing women and children who have experienced violence. However, when the outcomes of untested processes, such as the introduction of parent management hearings, can have enormous ramifications on the safety of women and children, we advocate that any new model should be based on research and evidence and informed every step of the way by domestic and family violence experts.<sup>7</sup>

1.17 Ms Snell, went on to say that Women's Legal Services support reform in this area and await the conclusion of the Australian Law Reform Commission's comprehensive review of the family law system.

1.18 Opposition Senators note that a number of other key submitters also argued very strongly that they were in agreement with the position taken by Women's Legal Services Australia's submission.

1.19 Ms Annette Gillespie, Chief Executive Officer, of safe steps Family Violence Response Centre raised concerns that a lack of access to legal representation was a key concern for victims of violence and agreed that it should not proceed without further investigation:

Our position is one of support for the submission made by Women's Legal Services Australia, and we have reached that position by considering the feedback we received from the women and children who we provide service to across the state of Victoria, particularly through our family advocacy and support services program.

The feedback we receive from our clients frequently comes back to this: they feel they are best placed to receive a fair outcome and to feel supported within the court system where they have access to legal representation.

They find the courts foreign, adversarial and overwhelming to navigate, and legal representation assists them to manage this process. Whilst we support many of the recommended changes put forward within the family violence and other measures bill, we are concerned that others represent a shifting of the problem rather than a response to its root cause, which is a lack of access to professional legal representation and a lack of training across the court system in identifying and responding to family violence.

We're opposed to the parenting management hearings bill proceeding in its current form and recommend a more thorough investigation of the proposal's merits.<sup>8</sup>

1.20 Ms Karen Willis, Executive Officer, Rape & Domestic Violence Services Australia told the committee that that they weren't satisfied with the consultation, evidence base and research underpinning the development of the legislation:

...the evidence on which it was based, when we checked it, really isn't terribly robust. The evidence was based on some work done where basically six people, three judges and three magistrates, were interviewed. Unfortunately, with people who are in positions of doing things like that, often their view will be influenced by 'what is best for me and what I think'.

7 Proof Committee Hansard, 22 February 2018, p. 6.

8 Proof Committee Hansard, 23 February 2018, p. 22.

---

There weren't actually any clients of those courts involved in that review of that particular model. And of course the model that was being reviewed and evaluated, on which this is based—well, the recommendation here is different. So we're a bit concerned about the evidence base and we do think that, if we're going to be doing anything in the family law area, it needs to be evidence based.<sup>9</sup>

1.21 Opposition Senators agree with concerns that the original intention of the legislation was not designed from the outset to deal with family and domestic violence, and that these considerations should have been fundamental to its development. In this regard we also agree with Ms Wills who told the committee:

We also are concerned that the model tacked on concerns about domestic violence rather than being foundational. We are dealing overwhelmingly with domestic violence situations here; how are we going to work with parenting models? What we actually said with this model is, 'Let's figure out parenting models. Oh, yes, some might have domestic violence; we need to think about how we're going to manage that.' And I'm not sure that that was a good way of doing it.<sup>10</sup>

1.22 Ms Kajhal McIntyre, Legal Researcher and Project Worker, Rape & Domestic Violence Services Australia also argued that the protections for those who have experienced family violence were inadequate.

We do note, of course, that there are several protections in this bill for people with family violence, but we suggest that they just don't go far enough. Because the model was originally designed not to deal with family violence and it was only at the last minute that the department made the determination that it would, in fact, cover family violence matters, the protections have been added on as an afterthought. We would say that what we've ended up with is an uncomfortable compromise where there's a large amount of discretion in the panel as to whether or not they do hear family violence matters. We've heard a lot about what a complex versus a non-complex family violence matter looks like. We would say that almost all family violence matters are incredibly complex and it's not clear from the bill which matters are too complex for them to hear or how they'll be making that determination, so that's of great concern to us.<sup>11</sup>

No Right to Legal Representation

1.23 Opposition Senators are concerned about the lack of a right to legal representation for those parties appearing before a Parenting Management Hearing.

1.24 Ms Kajhal McIntyre, Legal Researcher and Project Worker, Rape & Domestic Violence Services Australia also raised concerns about the lack of legal representation:

9 Proof Committee Hansard, 22 February 2018, p. 43.

10 Proof Committee Hansard, 22 February 2018, p. 43.

11 Proof Committee Hansard, 22 February 2018, p. 49.

I completely agree that the current system is not working. I think there are some really valuable points in this proposal. We're completely in support of the multidisciplinary nature of the panel. We're completely in support of the inquisitorial format. What we do have a significant issue with is the lack of legal representation, and I think that that is an incredible difference from the current system. That's not to say that legal representation is going to fix violence or to mean that none of those issues exist anymore—we know that that's not the case—but at the same time, when you put somebody in a room without an advocate and you have only two hours to deal with incredibly complex issues, there's just no way that you can guarantee that those issues.<sup>12</sup>

No Right to a Merits Review

1.25 Opposition Senators are concerned that there is no avenue for a merits review of a determination of a Parenting Management Hearing Panel. The only avenue of appeal from a determination is on a question of law. As the process of hearing is inquisitorial and parties will be unrepresented, parties may be unaware of their rights and when those rights will crystalise.

1.26 The Law Council of Australia's submission noted:

This is a more limited right of appeal than lies from a decision of a judicial registrar or senior registrar of the Family Court (which proceeds by way of review on a hearing de novo) or even on appeal from a parenting decision by a single judge of either the Federal Circuit Court or Family Court to the appeal division of the Family Court.<sup>13</sup>

1.27 The Bar Association of Victoria also express their concerns about the appeal provisions in the bill:

Briefly, the Association also has concerns in relation to the appeal provisions of the Bill. Section 11Q provides that a party may appeal to the Federal Circuit Court on a question of law only. However, subsection (5) provides that the Federal Circuit Court may make findings of fact. In circumstances where cross examination is to be the exception, it is unclear how the Federal Circuit Court is to make such findings. Further, an appeal as to law only appears to be contrary to subsection (6) which provides that the Court may generally receive evidence. It is submitted that these appeal provisions ought be reconsidered.<sup>14</sup>

Consent to Submit to Parenting Management Hearing

1.28 Opposition Senators are concerned that unrepresented parties will be in a position to give fully informed consent before submitting themselves to a Parenting Management Hearing.

12 Proof Committee Hansard, 22 February 2018, p. 47.

13 Submission 20, p.19.

14 Submission 20, p. 9.

1.29 The Law Council of Australia in their submission also expressed concerns around consent.

The simple conundrum or internal contradiction is that very few unrepresented litigants will be in a position to properly weigh up the advantages and disadvantages of the Panel and make an informed consent. The promise, or hope, of an earlier final hearing will be a powerful motivator in many cases. In most cases 'consent' will be a mirage and a consent in form only.<sup>15</sup>

Constitutionality

1.30 Opposition Senators are also concerned that Parenting Management Hearings may not be capable of withstanding constitutional challenge.

1.31 The proposed coercive power of direction in s 11ME may have the ultimate result of a penalty being imposed by a Court. The exercise of such a directions power is quasi-judicial in nature and may be problematic in light of the separation of judicial and executive power set out in Chapter III of the Constitution. The lack of a review mechanism by way of a merits review is also likely to bring it outside of its constitutional authority.

1.32 The Victorian Bar Association briefly touched on the constitutionality of Parenting Management Hearings in their submission:

Owing to the limited time in which to consider and respond to the Bill, this submission does not consider the constitutional validity of the Bill or various provisions within it including its the very broad delegation of powers (see s 11WB). However, the Association holds concerns in this regard, particularly in Family Law Amendment (Parenting Management Hearings) Bill 2017 Submission 23 2 light of the High Court decisions of (for example) Harris v Caladine [1991] HCA 9 and Lane v Morrison [2009] HCA 29.<sup>16</sup>

Conclusion

1.33 The Attorney-General's Department estimated that 500 families would submit themselves to Parenting Management Hearings during the proposed pilot. It would be likely that more than one thousand children may have determinations made about their lives.

1.34 As Zoe Rathus AM said in her evidence to the committee:

I suppose the problem for people who go through that is that it doesn't matter to them that it was a pilot. They get orders. Whatever happens to them is as permanent to them as though it were an order of the High Court, in a way. There's nothing pilot about the outcomes for them. They are real outcomes that they then have to live with.<sup>17</sup>

1.35 Opposition Senators believe that we should not be subjecting children to an experiment. The decisions made by a Parenting Management Panel may seriously change the emotional wellbeing of those children.

Australian Greens–Dissenting Report

1.1 The family law system is facing a crisis and urgent action must be taken to remedy it. However, the Australian Greens consider that the Family Law Amendment (Parenting Management Hearings) Bill 2017 (the bill) is rushed and flawed.

1.2 The bill received many submissions from groups and organisations which promote the safety of women, children and other disadvantaged groups and work to prevent domestic and sexual violence and abuse. Submitters shared a concern that the model for Parent Management Hearings (PMH) as outlined in the bill endangered victim-survivors of child abuse, family violence and domestic violence.

1.3 The Australian Women Against Violence Alliance noted that 'the format and approach of the PMH is not conducive to managing the risks arising from family violence for victim/ survivors and their children'.<sup>1</sup>

1.4 Women's Legal Services Australia noted that:

Innovative practice, new ideas and a culture of continuous improvement should be encouraged in any court system. However, when the outcomes of untried and untested processes can have enormous ramifications on the safety of women and children, such as the introduction of PMHs, we advocate any new model should be based on research and evidence and informed at every step by domestic and family violence experts.<sup>2</sup>

1.5 The Australian Greens agree with Women's Legal Service Australia's argument that:

On 27 September 2017, the Commonwealth Attorney-General commissioned the Australian Law Reform Commission (ALRC) to undertake the most comprehensive review of the family law system in Australia that has ever been undertaken. In our view, it makes sense that the PMH model be delayed and its implementation be specifically considered by the ALRC in their review before piloting such an untested model.<sup>3</sup>

1.6 The Australian Human Rights Commission raised a concern that the bill does not comply with Article 12 of the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child (CRC). Article 12 'sets out a child's right to express their views on all matters affecting the child, and to have those views given due weight in accordance with the age and maturity of the child'.<sup>4</sup>

1.7 The Australian Greens share the Australian Human Rights Commission's view that 'the proposed amendments do not give children who are affected by a parenting
