- (1) by abolishing the requirement for notification of prospective price rises it represents the final destruction of the Tribunal's ability to fulfil its original function of ensuring that unjustified price rises are not imposed on the community;
 - (2) it is contrary to the Government's supposed basic objective of reducing inflation and is especially inappropriate at a time when inflation is gathering pace;
 - (3) the introduction of such legislation at a time when the Government is continuously emphasising the need to prevent wage increases, and is currently seeking means to more effectively implement that policy, demonstrates utter insensitivity and naivety in regard to industrial relations and total disregard of equity, and
 - (4) by greatly increasing the power of the Minister to direct and restrict the Tribunal, it destroys its independence and renders the Tribunal subject to considerable political influence and control in its day to day operations".
