BACKGROUND

The findings of the Medical Journal of Australia article

The article “Impact of income management on store sales in the Northern Territory” by Menzies School of Medical Research researchers Brimblecombe et al published in a recent edition of the Medical Journal of Australia documents the findings of a study that aims to examine the impact of income management on store purchasing patterns in relation to tobacco sales and the dietary quality of purchased food and drinks, as measured by (i) total store sales; (ii) food and beverage sales; (iii) fruit and vegetable sales; and (iv) soft drink sales.

The purchasing patterns related to 10 ALPA stores, examining data before and after the introduction of income management.

The Menzies paper concludes that:

Income management independent of the government stimulus payment appears to have had no beneficial effect on tobacco and cigarette sales, soft drink or fruit and vegetable sales.

The authors identify some limitations to the extent to which the findings can be generalised to other remote communities in the NT. The limitations relate to the use of the FOODcard in ALPA stores (which restricts purchases to essential items). They also note that 8 of the 10 stores were in ‘dry’ communities before the Intervention.

However, they state that:

‘In all other respects, the stores are expected to be similar to other community stores in areas where government prescribed standards apply and where income management has taken effect’.

The Menzies paper provides no substantiation of this statement. No data were gathered from non-ALPA stores.

FaHCSIA Post Licensing Monitoring Report findings

The authors of the Menzies paper argue that their results contradict the results of the Store Licensing Survey.

FaHCSIA undertook post licensing monitoring of the impact on store managers of the rollout of stores licensing and income management. The results were compiled in the Final Stores Post Licensing Monitoring Report: 66 Stores, which was published on the FaHCSIA website in June 2009.

The FaHCSIA report contained two key findings which were reported by store managers, as follows:

Customer shopping habits have changed significantly in most stores, with 68.2 per cent of store operators reporting an increase in the amount of healthy food purchased. This includes items such as fruit and vegetables, as well as dairy foods and meat.

Responses suggest that sales of some goods, such as cigarettes, are unchanged (73.3 per cent of operators who answered this question reported no change).

The validity of the outcome measures used in the paper

The effectiveness of income management cannot be assessed by simply looking at whether fruit and vegetable sales have increased. Income management is designed to achieve a range of outcomes, including increasing the amount of money spent on priority needs, improving food security, reducing harassment for money and improved money management. Together, the outcomes sought through income management are intended to improve the well-being of children and families, increase self-reliance and build stronger families and more resilient communities.

The Menzies study does not itself provide a comprehensive assessment on the effectiveness of income management since it considers outcome measures which are not valid tests of the overall impact of income management, i.e. trends in (i) total store sales; (ii) total food and beverage sales; (iii) fruit and vegetable sales (iv) soft drink sales (v) tobacco sales

Accuracy of dates used for the start of income management

The authors do not list the stores chosen for their study in their paper and were unwilling to provide us this information upon our request. However, we have a good idea of the stores chosen.

When we tried to match the actual income management start dates against these stores we found discrepancies with some of the dates used for this study. It would seem that the switch-on dates used in the study in some cases may be earlier than the actual switch-on dates – for example at least one ALPA store had a switch-on date in July, but the Menzies paper does not identify any stores as having July switch-on dates. Also, only one store had a switch-on date in March but the paper identifies two stores as switching on in March. Using earlier switch-on dates would be likely to reduce the measured impact of income management on the available data. The discrepancy in the dates brings into serious doubt the validity of their regression analysis.

What does the data in the paper say about sales of fruit and vegetables, soft drinks and tobacco?

The paper by Brimblecombe et al focuses on whether fruit and vegetable sales have increased as a result of the introduction of income management. However, there is some doubt over the paper's analysis and conclusions.

Even if you focus purely on fruit and vegetable sales the question is not whether sales increased after income management was established: it is rather whether there is a causal link between the introduction of income management and fruit and vegetable sales

The paper does provide clear evidence of a significant increase in fruit and vegetable sales following the introduction of income management. The paper argues that this increase is a result of the economic stimulus payment not income management.

FaHCSIA has looked at the data provided in the Menzies paper and come to some different conclusions.

Table One is produced from FaHCSIA analysis of the information provided in the Menzies paper. It shows sales in the pre and post intervention period. It is important to note that the post intervention period discussed in the Menzies paper is not the entire period after which income management was introduced but rather the period selected by the authors as the 'post intervention period'. This period excludes three months around the time of the economic stimulus payments and the first 4-6 months of income management.

While the choice of dates by the authors is questionable it is not critical for the analysis provided below. Table One actually shows a statistically significant increase in fruit in vegetable sales measured in both dollars and volume. For example there was a 45% increase in per capita sales of fruit and vegetables measured in kilograms. There was also a 39% increase in fruit and vegetable sales measured in dollars. The estimates in dollars should be treated with some caution as sales in dollar terms could increase simply because of price rises. This is a factor that the authors ignore throughout their paper.

Table One also shows that there was a statistically significant increase in food and drink sales from the pre to post intervention period.

Table One: Post-intervention and Pre-intervention monthly mean sales (including confidence intervals)

Outcome measures	Pre-intervention Per Capita Monthly mean (CI) ¹	Post-intervention Per Capita Monthly mean (CI)	Change (%)

Mean CPI – Darwin	100.0	106.4	6.4
Note - CPI mean values for Post-intervention covers only February to September 2009. October 2008 CPI adjustment has been excluded from the calculations.

The share of store sales accounted for by fruit and vegetables also grew over the period considered by the Menzies paper. The total value of store sales grew by 27% compared to an increase of 39% in fruit and vegetable sales. FaHCSIA analysis of the data shows in Table Two that the share of sales accounted for by fruit and vegetables sales grew from 3.7% in the pre-intervention period to 4.0% in the post-intervention period.

The authors of the Menzies paper emphasise the significance of the increase in sales of soft drinks. While there was a statistically significant increase in soft drink sales it was much smaller than the increase in fruit and vegetable sales and soft drink sales actually grew at a considerably slower rate than sales in general. The share of sales accounted for by soft drinks actually fell from 7.4% in the pre intervention period to 6.5% in the post-intervention period.

Importantly Table Two also shows that the share of sales accounted for by tobacco fell over the period.

Table Two: Item Sales as a proportion of total sales

The results outlined above appear to clash with the results of the regression analysis undertaken by the authors of the Menzies paper. We are unable to fully explain this as the paper itself does not provide sufficient detail on the model. For example we do not know how the authors modelled what they describe as the pre-intervention trend. We have asked the authors a number of questions but the key statistician who prepared the paper was on leave and we are yet to receive a detailed response.

We do know from the paper that the regression analysis does not provide a total pre and post income management comparison. The regression analysis rather provides comparisons for a range of sub-periods – the first 4-6 months of income management, the government stimulus payment period and what the authors call the post-intervention period. The regression gives an estimate of the rate of change in each of these sub periods without providing an estimate of the total pre and post income management effect.

By splitting the time frames up in the way they have the authors may have masked the significant increase in fruit and vegetable sales apparent in Table One and Table Two.

In addition there is no real theoretical justification offered for the split time frames adopted, yet these drive the result achieved under the regression. This particularly applies to what the authors call the Government stimulus payment period. The authors separate out this period, arguing that the economic stimulus payments to individuals rather than income management itself led to an increase in sales during this period. The authors fail to mention one very important point – 100% of the stimulus payment was income managed in these communities. Thus the stimulus payment period was a period when an unusually high proportion of income was subject to income management.

There is therefore no logical reason to exclude this period completely in any analysis of the impact of income management on fruit and vegetable sales. Their results may actually provide evidence of the power of income management to alter sale patterns. Such a conclusion would be much more consistent with the international literature on income quarantining which is not discussed in the paper in any depth. The literature suggests that these restrictions do affect sales patterns.

The MJA article's findings should not be generalised to other community stores in the Northern Territory

ALPA stores are not similar to other community store in many other respects that are centrally relevant to the conclusions drawn by the authors. ALPA stores' unique features reflect their long-standing commitment to improving nutritional outcomes. With such a strong commitment, it would be expected that the impact of income management and stores licensing would be less in these 10 stores than in stores without a strong nutritional focus.

The relevant unique features of ALPA stores are set out in ALPA's submission to the HoRSCATSIA Inquiry into Community Stores in Remote Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Communities, and include:

- ALPA has had a nutrition policy in place since 1985 – this is not typical of remote stores, particularly not in the period before income management and stores licensing was in place. As part of their nutrition policy, they
 - o do not include freight in the price of fruit and vegetables sold in its store
 - o have, had explicit priorities targetting diabetes, kidney disease, heart disease, aged care and children's health since 2004
 - o focus on increasing fruit and vegetable sales
 - o focus on increasing healthy takeaway sales

Other features which reflect ALPA's nutritional focus include that they:

- o employ a nutritionist to work with ALPA management and staff
- o employ local Good Food people in each of their stores who provide external education of community residents on making healthy food choices
- o have retail management practices which enable them to reduce costs for healthy food and maintain higher quality of food on offer in their stores. 'The quality of fresh produce is often comparable in quality and price to that of Darwin due to high competition for our business and our ongoing strategy to subsidise the freight on fruit and vegetables to drive consumption.' 'Typically, ALPA have been 10% cheaper on a standard range of fruit and vegetable lines compared with mainstream retailers in the Darwin area.'

In addition ALPA only takes on the management of stores in larger communities which can afford to pay for their services. Stores in larger communities are generally more able to support good nutritional outcomes than stores in smaller communities.

In summary:

- The analysis is based on sales in ten of the best remote community stores in the NT which have had a longstanding emphasis on good nutrition and thus where the impact of income management may not be as great as elsewhere
- The analysis attempts to test only one of the multiple rationales for income management, namely the impact on sales of fruit and vegetables. The findings do not justify the conclusions drawn about income management generally. Income management is not just about increasing consumption of fruit and vegetables
- Even if it was, the analysis seems puzzling, given the data clearly shows a significant increase in the turnover (measured in Kgs) of fruit and vegetables (45%), which is more than 4 times higher than the increased turnover of soft drink (9.8%). This effect appears to have been disguised by the modeling and in a manner that is less than transparent.
- The paper appears quite unbalanced in its treatment of the increase in turnover of fruit and vegetables, compared with the increased turnover of soft drink. It notes that the average daily level of fruit and vegetable consumption in the income-management period was “about 152 g per person per day” (which is the increase of 3.15 kg to 4.57 kg a month), yet it has no similar comparator for soft drink. In fact, the difference according to Table 2 is around 30ml a day – from 270 ml up to 295 ml (which is less than a can of soft drink a day). That is, the increase in daily soft drink consumption was, on average, 25 ml a day, or 5 teaspoons, or one mouthful.
 - o That is, the increases in the table say that, on average, people went from 2 serves of vegetables per day to 3 serves per day – i.e. an increase of 1 serve of vegetables a day. In contrast it shows an increase in soft drink consumption of around 5 teaspoons.
- That is, there is no discussion about the overall scale of issues to inform the debate.
- The analysis ignores the fact that the stimulus payments were themselves subject to 100 percent income management for income support recipients.
- Some of the dates used to determine the switch-on time of income management appear not to align with the actual dates – this issue, in and of itself would fatally undermine the paper’s analysis (if the wrong switch-on date is used then one is not looking at any effect of IM).

Given these issues it appears somewhat surprising that this work was published in a reputable journal – some simple arithmetic should have alerted the people doing the peer reviewing that there needed to be some extra discussion around what it all means.

DEEWR Question No. CA0001_11

Senator Siewert asked on 4/06/2010, Hansard page 59.

Question

UNEMPLOYMENT RATE IN THE BROADER POPULATION

Senator SIEWERT—I understand what you are saying about this year, but you can still compare it to previous years, can't you, where you are looking at the unemployment rate in the broader population and comparing it to the figures for last year? I must have misunderstood.

Mr Griew—Do you mean going retrospectively back, from 2009 to 2008 to 2007?

Senator SIEWERT—Yes.

Mr Griew—One can go back to 2000 that way, but we do not have that data with us.

Senator SIEWERT—Could you take that on notice.

Answer

Statistics from the ABS Labour Force Characteristics Survey indicate that the unemployment rate for Indigenous Australians aged 15 years and over declined between 2002 and 2007 (18.3 per cent in 2002, 18.4 per cent in 2003, 16.8 per cent in 2004, 15.8 per cent in 2005, 13.9 per cent in 2006 and 13.8 per cent in 2007). In 2008, the unemployment rate for Indigenous Australians increased slightly from 13.8 per cent to 14.2 per cent. Between 2008 and 2009, covering a period affected by the global recession, the unemployment rate increased to 18.0 per cent.

In comparison, the unemployment rate for non-Indigenous Australians demonstrated a similar trend (5.3 per cent in 2004, 4.9 per cent in 2005, 4.7 per cent in 2006 and 4.2 per cent in 2007). In 2009, the unemployment rate for non-Indigenous Australians rose to 5.4 per cent.

It should be noted that, since 2008, COAG has used National Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Social Survey (NATSISS) and the National Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Health Survey (NATSIHS), rather than the ABS Labour Force Characteristics Survey to measure Indigenous Australians' employment participation and unemployment rates.

ABS estimates on Indigenous Australians employment based on the ABS Labour Force Survey are less accurate than the NATSISS and NATSIHS. This is due to the ABS Labour Force Survey:

Having a small Indigenous sample size of around only 3 000 people;

Not being designed to capture small geographic areas or locations with small populations – a particular issue for the Indigenous population. This means that the ABS LFS is less representative of the rate of Indigenous employment in communities with small populations.

The margin of error for Indigenous Australians' unemployment using Labour Force Survey data is very high: 2 percentage points (compared to the standard error on the total unemployment rate for Australia of only 0.1 percentage points). SQ10-001344

Given the issues above, the data source accepted by COAG as more appropriate for measuring the Indigenous Australians' labour force outcomes are the two surveys specifically designed to provide information about the Indigenous people: the NATSISS and the NATSIHS.

NATSISS/H data show that the unemployment rate for workforce-aged Indigenous Australians has improved from 23 per cent in 2002 to 15.5 per cent in 2004-05 and slightly increased to 16.6 per cent in 2008.

Labour force status of workforce aged (15 - 64 years) population

DEEWR Question No. CA0002_11

Senator Adams asked on 4/06/2010, Hansard page 62.

Question

ABORIGINAL CORPORATION CALLED NGUMBU

Senator ADAMS—A newly incorporated Aboriginal corporation called Ngumbu, at Leonora, has recently applied to DEEWR for funding to hire a business consultant—to assist them in preparing a business plan to submit to FaHCSIA, to see if they could manage a CDEP in the goldfields. The main reason is that with all the mining activity—and, hopefully, these mines will keep going and not go into recess—a number of the employees around that particular area of Menzies, Leonora, Laverton and Wiluna are moving north. There is a large number of Aboriginal people who are trying to get themselves skilled up so that they can apply for jobs. They are being very keenly supported by the Shire of Leonora and a number of mining companies, to see if this corporation can be successful and to have something locally. So that is really the reason for that. On their behalf, I would ask how long it will take for DEEWR to process the application. When could they expect to be told whether they have been successful or not?

Mr Griew—We will have to take that on notice, I am afraid. Not only would I prefer not to comment on an individual funding application but also it is not one that either Ms Wood or I is personally acquainted with; it will have come through our state office into the line area.

Answer

In November 2009, the Department received an initial Indigenous Employment Program enquiry form from the Ngumbu Aboriginal Corporation (NAC) for this project. Since then the Department has had ongoing discussions with the NAC about this project.

On 27 April 2010, the NAC submitted a formal Indigenous Employment Program project proposal and quote. A review of this proposal identified a number of issues.

The Department is continuing to work closely with the NAC to address and resolve these concerns.

Topic: BasicsCard – List of Merchants

Question reference number: CLK1

Senator: SIEWERT

Type of question: Hansard CA page 22, 4 June 2010

Date set by the committee for the return of answer: 30 July 2010

Number of pages: 59

Question:

Senator SIEWERT - Can I put a question on notice. Is it possible to get a list of all the stores that have signed up?

Mr Tidswell - The 3,000?

Senator SIEWERT - Yes.

Mr Tidswell -I am sure we can supply that list on notice.

Answer:

A list of merchants approved for BasicsCard is attached. These are merchants approved to participate in the new BasicsCard Scheme. The data is current as of 4 June 2010.

Please note that major chains such as Coles and other merchants may have more than one store trading in the same suburb.

Please also note that this listing contains the business name of the merchant and this name may differ from the trading name.
