Department of Employment Question No. EMSQ16-000113

Senator Moore asked on 11 February 2016 on proof Hansard page 136

Question

WGEA - Equilibrium Man website

Senator MOORE: I will go on to the next one, which is that documentary-style filming of a range of people in different stages of employment. I could not find that on the website. It was quite prominent in the past. Down the side, the project was identified, and each of the documentary-style film clips was there so that you could look at the gentleman towards the end of his career looking at changing towards the end, and you could look at the person who was a stay-at-home parent. Is there a problem with that at the moment, or is it not being featured quite as strongly?

Ms Clifford: I am certainly not aware of a problem. The Equilibrium Man site is actually a separate website, and that has been established. The actual project was funded by Mirvac and Telstra, and we were part of the process but not a financial contributor to the process except in a small amount in the past. It is certainly something that we can look into, because it may be a link problem, but I have not heard that.

Senator MOORE: It was core on the website at the last round of estimates. The Equilibrium Man project was—

Ms Clifford: More prominent.

Senator MOORE: When you went to the Workplace Gender Equality Agency website, it was core there. It was not like you had to go to a separate one. Maybe that is a change. I am not making a judgement about that. I just could not find him when I went to prepare for the estimates.

Ms Clifford: We are happy to take that on notice and give you an update on what is happening.

The Equilibrium Challenge has its own website: <http://equilibriumchallenge.com.au/> which is not owned, developed or maintained by the Workplace Gender Equality Agency (Agency).

Throughout the challenge, the Agency has maintained a link on its website to the Equilibrium Challenge website. At key times throughout the challenge it has also been featured on a front page banner on the Agency website.

Content on the front page of the Agency's website is regularly updated to reflect the range of projects in which we participate and to provide stakeholders with the latest relevant information. Links to the Equilibrium Challenge website, however, remain within the 'Strategic approach to flexibility' section on the Agency website.
