DEEWR Question No. EW0138_14

Senator Siewert asked on 4 June 2013, Hansard page 47

Question

Specialist services for DES

Ms Parker: There is another component to choosing specialists. There are those who say they can run a service and they know there are job seekers and they can look after them if they are Indigenous. We do our own analysis as well. There are two components. When we assess whether we need a specialist service in the area, it is about those two things: firstly, is there anyone who wants to deliver it, and thinks they should and can, and has got data to show that those job seekers exist; and, secondly, there is our own analysis. And that is done at the local level through our contract managers and our labour market analysis. It is not just a matter of if you put your hand up and you can deliver; we need the evidence to show that it is actually needed. So all of those things are taken into account.

Senator SIEWERT: In this instance, you do not say you need one here and you need one there?

Ms Parker: Partly, yes, we do. Our contract managers in the state offices are very good at this. If there are a lot of refugees, for example, that would be a good case for showing it would be good to have a specialist refugee service—not necessarily, but it is a fact that we would consider.

Senator SIEWERT: Where are they located in the four states that you mentioned?

Ms Buffinton: I would have to take that on notice.
