Question

FWC - Union restrictions on legal representation

CHAIR: I understand other unions have similar restrictions on legal representation in their rules. Which unions have that restriction?

Mr Enright: I would have to take that on notice.

Answer

In addition to the CFMEU's Rule 26A, there are a number of other unions (registered as employee organisations) that have rules that appear to limit whether or not members can be represented by an external legal representative during internal proceedings.

Based on a review of the rules of federally registered organisations of employees, the following employee organisations have rules explicitly restricting legal representation:

- The Australian Maritime Officers' Union (AMOU), at Rule 87;
- Community and Public Sector Union (CPSU), at Chapter B, PSU Group Rules, Rule 5.19;
- The Media, Entertainment and Arts Alliance (MEAA), at Rule 73;
- Police Federation of Australia (PFA) Queensland Branch, at Rule 78.

The following employee organisations have rules that allow legal representation with permission:

- The Australian Workers' Union (AWU), at Rule 19(6);
- The Automotive, Food, Metals, Engineering, Printing and Kindred Industries Union known as the Australian Manufacturing Workers' Union (AMWU), at Rule 13;
- Health Services Union (HSU), at Rule 28.

In a number of cases, organisations' rules are silent on the issue of legal representation.
