Senator Carr (Written) asked:

Once a tender is granted, are there reporting structures in place?

If yes, what are the reporting structures?

If no, why are there no reporting structures in place?

Is there are plan to introduce reporting structures?

Answer:

Reporting structures are in place for tenders published by the department.

Once a tender is granted, the reporting requirements are determined by what is specified in the subsequent contract.

The reporting structures differ depending on the value of the contract, potential risk, size and complexity and other relevant aspects. Each reporting structure takes into consideration the relevant aspects.
