

To Senators on the Senate Select Committee on Climate Policy,

I think the current scheme is very poor. I really want the carbon emissions reduction target to be set at a level sufficient for actually affecting the impending climate change catastrophe. This is clearly more important than protecting the profits of the big polluters. It is imperative that the coal-industry and other carbon polluters are encouraged (or forced if necessary) to reduce their emissions, not protected from having to do so.

I also want the emissions reduction efforts of ordinary people such as myself to make a difference. For example, I do not want the emissions that I am saving by installing photovoltaic cells (which I will be doing in the next couple of months) to allow the coal-fired electricity generators to emit more. I am flabbergasted angry that this is a feature of the current scheme.
