

We are very disturbed by the present approach to Emissions Trading

First the target is far too low – Australia should give an example to the rest of the World, we can afford to do so.

Second we do not agree that big polluters should be compensated – after all they have known this was coming and should have begun to prepare for it.

The idea of being able to organize ‘carbon capture and storage’ is nowhere near possible for a long while, a demonstration stage is planned for 2020!

Nuclear power is not the way to go – because of the energy it uses and the present inability to cope with the residues.

The best solution in Australia, with its sunlight, wind and water, is to use the natural and renewable resources to provide our power (which is possible), while phasing out all the dirty sources of power we have now.

Jennifer and Neville Crew OAM for both