

To Senators on the Senate Select Committee on Climate Policy,

As a concerned Australian I want us to have in place an emission control/reduction scheme that results in a significant change to our impact on the environment.

I do not support a system which simply shifts the problem, or one which supports or compensates polluters.

I want to see a significant cut in our emissions, and am striving on a personal level to make my contribution to this.

To keep my confidence in the government's integrity, I'd need to see real targets (not pretend ones), targets that will impress upon world politics my country's commitment to change.

I have to say that the targets I've read about recently in the media look pathetic. I don't think they will make the difference that is required.

Thank you
